With conquest, felt th' envenom'd robe, and tore,
Thro' pain, up by the roots Thessalian pines. Milt.

Not

Nor with envenom'd tongue to blaſt the fame
Of harmleſs men. Philips.

8. To make odious.
Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it! Shakeſ. As you like it.

3. To enrage; to exaſperate.
With her full force ſhe threw the pois'nous dart,
And fix'd it deep within Amata's heart;
That thus envenom'd ſhe might kindle rage
And ſacrifice to ſtrife her houſe and huſband's age.
Dryden.

E'NVIABLE. adj. [from envy.] Deſerving envy; ſuch as may excite envy.
They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune, do happily poſſeſs themſelves Carew's Surv. of Cornw.

E'NVIER. n. ſ. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that deſires the downfall of another.
Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute to the diſadvantage of their virtues. Bacon.
They ween'd
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To ſet the envier of his ſtate, the proud
Aſpirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.
Milton.
All preferments in church and ſtate were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers diſcountenanced.
Clarendon

E'NVIOUS. adj. [from envy.]
1. Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happineſs of another.
A man of the moſt envious diſpoſition that ever infected the air with his breath, whoſe eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praiſe. Sidney.
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To ſilence envious tongues. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

2. Sometimes with againſt.
Be not thou envious againſt evil men. Prov. xxiv. 19.

3. Sometimes with at.
Neither be thou envious at the wicked.
Prov. xxiv. 19.

4. Commonly with of.
Sure you miſtake the precept, or the tree;
Heaven cannot envious of his bleſſings be. Dryden.

E'NVIOUSLY. adv. [from envious.] With envy: with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.
Damned ſpirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviouſly to obſtruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duppa.
How enviouſly the ladies look,
When they ſurpriſe me at my book!
And ſure as they're alive at night,
As ſoon as gone, will ſhew their ſpight. Swift.

To ENVI'RON. v. a. [environner, French.]
1. To ſurround; to encompaſs; to encircle.
I ſtand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderneſs of ſea. Shakeſpeare.
The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every ſide environed with huge mountains.
Knolles.
The manifold ſtreams of goodly navigable rivers, as ſo many chains, environed the ſame ſite and temple. Bacon.
Within the environing rocks ſtood the city. Sandys.
Thought following thought, and ſtep by ſtep led on,
He enter'd now the bordering deſart wild,
And with dark ſhades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus purſu'd. Milton.
God hath ſcattered ſeveral degrees of pleaſure and pain in all things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almoſt all our thoughts.
Locke.

2. To involve; to envelope.
May never glorious ſun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkneſs and the gloomy ſhade of death
Environ you, 'till miſchief and deſpair
Drive you to break your necks. Shakeſp. Henry VI.
Since ſhe muſt go, and I muſt mourn, come, night,
Environ me with darkneſs whilſt I write. Donne.

3. To ſurround in a hoſtile manner; to beſiege; to hem in.
Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environed me, and howled in mine ears. Shakeſp.
In thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer. Shakeſ.
I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When ſtraight a barbarous noiſe environs me. Milt.

4. To incloſe; to inveſt.
The ſoldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horiron all environ. Cleaveland.

ENVI'RONS. n. ſ. [environs, French.] The neighbourhood, or neighbouring places round about the country.

To ENU'MERATE. v. a. [enumero, Latin.] To reckon up ſingly; to count over diſtinctly; to number.
You muſt not only acknowledge to God that you are a ſinner, but muſt particularly enumerate the kinds of ſin whereof you know yourſelf guilty.
Wake's Preparation for Death.
Beſides enumerating the groſs defect of duty to the queen, I ſhew how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERA'TION. n. ſ. [enumeratio, Latin.] The act of numbering or counting over; number told out.
Whoſoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties, muſt conclude, that well nigh the buſineſs of Chriſtianity is laid on charity. Spratt.
The chemiſts make ſpirit, ſalt, ſulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements. Watts.

To ENU'NCIATE. v. a. [enuncio, Latin.] To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to expreſs.

ENUNCIA'TION. n. ſ. [enunciatio, Latin.]
1. Declaration; publick atteſtation; open proclamation.
Preaching is to ſtrangers and infants in Chriſt, to produce faith; but this ſacramental enunciation is the declaration and confeſſion of it by men in Chriſt, declaring it to be done, and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Taylor.
2. Intelligence; information.
It remembers and retains ſuch things as were never at all in the ſenſe; as the conceptions, enunciations, and actions of the intellect and will.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.
3. Expreſſion.

ENU'NCIATIVE. adj. [from enunciate.] Declarative; expreſſive.
This preſumption only proceeds in reſpect of the diſpoſitive words, and not in regard of the enunciative terms thereof. Ayliffe.

ENU'NCIATIVELY. adv. [from enunciative.] Declaratively.

E'NVOY. n. ſ. [envoye, French.]
1. A publick miniſter ſent from one power to another.
Now the Lycian lots conſpire
With Phœbus; now Jove's envoy through the air
Brings diſmal tidings. Denham.

2. A publick meſſenger, in dignity below an ambaſſador.
3. A meſſenger.
The watchful ſentinels at every gate,
At ev'ry paſſage to the ſenſes wait;
Still travel to and fro the nervous way,
And their impreſſions to the brain convey;
Where their report the vital envoys make,
And with new orders are commanded back.
Blackmore.

To E'NVY. v. a. [envier, French; invidere, Latin.]
1. To hate another for excellence, happineſs, or ſucceſs.
Envy thou not the oppreſſor, and chuſe none of his ways. Prov. iii. 31.
A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty.
Collier of Envy.
2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.
I have ſeen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shakeſpeare.
You cannot envy your neighbour's wiſdom, if he gives you good counſel; nor his riches, if he ſupplies you in your wants; nor his greatneſs, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.
3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciouſly.
Jonſon, who, by ſtudying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, ſeemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

To E'NVY. v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the ſight of excellence or felicity: with at.
In ſeeking tales and informations
Againſt this man, whoſe honeſty the devil
And his diſciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shakeſ. Henry VIII.
He that loves God is not diſpleaſed at accidents which God chuſes, nor envies at thoſe gifts he beſtows. Taylor.
Who would envy at the proſperity of the wicked, and the ſucceſs of perſecutors? Taylor.

E'NVY. n. ſ. [from the verb.]
1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the ſight of excellence or happineſs.
Envy is a repining at the proſperity or good of another, or anger and diſpleaſure at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray on the Creation.
Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a ſlave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope.
2. It is uſed ſometimes with of.
All the conſpirators, ſave only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæſar. Shakeſp.
3. Sometimes with to.
Many ſuffered death merely in envy to their virtuous and ſuperiour genius. Swift.
4. Rivalry; competition.
You may ſee the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden.
5. Malice; malignity.
Madam, this is a meer diſtraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shakeſpeare.
6. Publick odium; ill repute; invidiouſneſs.
Edward Plantagenet ſhould be ſhewed unto the people; to diſcharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

To ENWHE'EL. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompaſs; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakeſpeare.
Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n,
Before, behind thee, and on ev'ry hand
Enwheel thee round. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

To ENWO'MB. v. a. [from womb.]
1. To make pregnant.
Me then he left enwombed of this child,
This luckleſs child, whom thus ye ſee with blood.
Spenſer.
I'm your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of thoſe
That were enwombed mine. Shakeſpeare.
2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.
Or as the Africk niger ſtream enwombs
Itſelf into the earth, and after comes,
Having firſt made a natural bridge to paſs,
For many leagues, far greater than it was;
May't not be ſaid, that her grave ſhall reſtore
Her greater, purer, finer than before? Donne.

EO'LIPILE. n. ſ. [from Æolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe; which ball, filled with water, and expoſed to the fire, ſends out, as the water heats, heats, at intervals, blaſts of cold wind through the pipe.

Conſidering the ſtructure of that globe, the exterior cruſt, and the waters lying round under it, both expoſed to the ſun, we may fitly compare it to an eolipile, or an hollow ſphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarefies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

EPA'CT. n. ſ. [ἐπακτὸς.] A number, whereby we note the exceſs of the common ſolar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the ſolar year conſiſting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the ſolar year: and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 minutes 12 lunations, or gets up one whole ſolar year; and having finiſhed that circuit, begins again with the ſun, and ſo from 19 to 19 years. For the firſt year afterwards the moon will go before the ſun but 11 days; the ſecond year 22 days; the third 33 days: but 30 being an entire lunation, caſt that away, and the remainder 3 ſhall be that year's epact; and ſo on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten;
Thirty reject: the prime makes epact then. Harris.

As the cycle of the moon ſerves to ſhew the epacts, and that of the ſun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; ſo this Dionyſian period ſerves to ſhew theſe two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, 'till at laſt they accompliſh their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Holder

EPA'ULMENT. n. ſ. [French, from epaule, a ſhoulder.] In fortification, a ſidework made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of faſcines and earth. It ſometimes denotes a ſemibaſtion and a ſquare orillion, or maſs of earth faced and lined with a wall, deſigned to cover the cannon of a cazemate. Harris.

EPE'NTHESIS. n. ſ. [ἐπενθεσις.] [In grammar.] The addition of a vowel or conſonant in the middle of a word. Harris.

E'PHA. n. ſ. [Hebrew.] A meaſure among the Jews, containing fifteen ſolid inches.

The epha and the bath ſhall be of one meaſure; that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the epha the tenth part of an homer. Ezekiel.

EPHE'MERA. n. ſ. [ἐφήμερον.]

1. A fever that terminates in one day.
2. An inſect that lives only one day.

EPHE'MERAL. } adj. [ἐφημέριος.] Diurnal;
EPHE'MERICK. } beginning and ending in a day.

This was no more than a mere bubble or blaſt, and like an ephemeral fit of applauſe. Wotton.

EPHE'MERIS. n. ſ. [ἐφημερὶς.]

1. A journal; an account of daily tranſactions.
2. An account of the daily motions and ſituations of the planets.

When caſting up his eyes againſt the light,
Both month and day, and hour he meaſur'd right;
And told more truly than the ephemeris;
For art may err, but nature cannot miſs. Dryden.

EPHE'MERIST. n. ſ. [from ephemeris.] One who conſults the planets; one who ſtudies or practiſes aſtrology.

The night before, he was diſcourſing of and fighting the art of fooliſh aſtrologers, and geomantical ephemeriſts that pry into the horoſcope of nativities. Howel.

EPHEMERON-WORM. n. ſ. [from ἐφήμερον and worm.] A ſort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam obſerves of the ephemeron-worms, that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the ſame. Derham.

EPHOD. n. ſ. [אפוד.] A ſort of ornament worn by the Hebrew prieſts. That worn by the high prieſt was richly compoſed of gold, blue, purple, crimſon, and twiſted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two ſhoulders were two large precious ſtones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Iſrael, upon each ſtone ſix names. Where the ephod croſſed the high prieſt's breaſt, was a ſquare ornament, called the breaſt plate; in which twelve precious ſtones were ſet, with the names of the twelve tribes of Iſrael engraved on them, one on each ſtone. The ephods worn by the other prieſts were of plain linen. Calmet.

He made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, and fine twined linen. Exod. xxxix. 2.

Array'd in ephods; nor ſo few
As are thoſe pearls of morning dew,
Which hang on herbs and flowers. Sandys.

E'PIC. adj. [epicus, Latin; ἔπος.] Narrative; compriſing narrations, not acted, but rehearſed. It is uſually ſuppoſed to be heroick, or to contain one great action atchieved by a hero.

Holmes, whoſe name ſhall live in epic ſong,
While muſic numbers, or while verſe has feet. Dryd.

The epic poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the paſſions. Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epic. Broome.

EPICE'DIUM. n. ſ. [ἐπικήδιος.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above ſhall hear each day
One dirge diſpatch'd unto your clay;
Theſe, your own anthems, ſhall become
Your laſting epicedium. Sandys's Paraphraſe.

E'PICURE. n. ſ. [epicureus, Latin.] A follower of Epicurus, a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly falſe thanes,
And mingle with the Engliſh epicures. Shakeſp.

The epicure buckles to ſtudy, when ſhame, or the deſire to recommend himſelf to his miſtreſs, ſhall make him uneaſy in the want of any ſort of knowledge. Locke.

EPICU'REAN. adj. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feaſts,
Keep his brain fuming; epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloyleſs ſauce his appetite. Shakeſp.

E'PICURISM. n. ſ. [from epicure.] Luxury; ſenſual enjoyment; groſs pleaſure.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and ſquires;
Men ſo diſorder'd, ſo debauch'd, and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; epicuriſm and luſt
Make it a tavern or a brothel. Shakeſp. King Lear.

There is not half ſo much epicuriſm in any of their moſt ſtudied luxuries, as a bleeding ſame at their mercy. Government of the Tongue.

Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the greateſt ſenſuality, a piece of epicuriſm. Calamy's Sermons.

To EPICURI'ZE. v. a. [from Epicurus.] To devour like an epicure. A word not uſed.

While I could ſee thee ſull of eager pain
My greedy eyes epicuriz'd on thine. Flatman.

EPICY'CLE. n. ſ. [ἐπὶ and κύκλος.] A little circle whoſe centre is in the circumference of a greater; or a ſmall orb, which, being in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet faſtened to it round about its proper centre. Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or leſſer orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal. Brown.

Gird the ſphere
With centric and eccentric, ſcribbl'd o'er;
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton's Par. Loſt.

EPICY'CLOID. n. ſ. [ἐπικυκλοειδὴς.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle. Harris.

EPIDE'MICAL. } adj. [ἐπὶ and δῆμος.]
EPIDE'MICK. }

1. That which falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemic diſeaſe, but to proceed from a malignity in the conſtitution of the air, gathered by the prediſpoſitions of ſeaſons. Bacon.

As the proportion of epidemical diſeaſes ſhews the aptneſs of the air to ſudden and vehement impreſſions, the chronical diſeaſes ſhew the ordinary temper of the place. Graunt.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemical and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are thoſe who ſhine as exceptions. South.

He ought to have been buſied in loſing his money, or in other amuſements equally laudable and epidemick among perſons of honour. Swift.

3. General; univerſal. Not uſed, nor proper.

They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all:
Scotland's a nation epidemical Clea. elanc.

EPIDE'RMIS. n. ſ. [ἐπιδερμὶς.] The ſcarf-ſkin of a man's body.

E'PIGRAM. n. ſ. [epigramma, Latin.] A ſhort poem terminating in a point.

A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour: do'ſt thou think I care for a ſatire or an epigram? Shakeſpeare.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant phyſician that had been the death of thouſands?
Peacham of Poetry.

I writ
An epigam that boaſts more truth than wit. Guy.

EPIGRAMMA'TICAL. } adj. [epigrammaticus,
EPIGRAMMA'TICK. } Latin.]

1. Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Wincheſter, thinketh no ominous foreſpeaking to lie in names. Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit and groſs hyperboles: he maintains majeſty in the midſt of plainneſs, he ſhines but glares not; and is ſtately, without ambition. Addiſon.

He has none of thoſe little points and puerilities that are ſo often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan; none of thoſe ſwelling ſentiments which are ſo frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of thoſe mixt embelliſhments of Taſſo. Addiſon.

EPIGRA'MMATIST. n. ſ. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jeſt upon a poor wit, at firſt might have had an epigrammatiſt for its father, and been afterwards gravely underſtood by ſome painful collector. Pope.

Such a cuſtomer the epigrammatiſt Martial meets with, one who, after he had walked through the faireſt ſtreet twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden diſh. Fracham.

EPI'GRAPHIE. n. ſ. [ἐπιγραφὴ.] An inſcription on a ſtatue. Diet.

EPILEPSY

EPILEPSY. n. ſ. [ἐπιλαμψις.] A convulſion, or convulſive motion of the whole body, or ſome of its parts, with a loſs of ſenſe. A convulſive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any part with ſo great violence, that the mind cannot reſtrain them. Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepſy:
This is the ſecond fit. Shakeſpeare's Othello.

Melancholy diſtempers are deduced from ſpirits drawn from that cachochymia; the phrenitis from cholerick ſpirits, and the epilepſy from fumes. Floyer on the Humours.

EPILE'PTICK. adj. [from epilepſy.] Convulſed; diſeaſed with an epilepſy.

A plague upon your epileptick viſage!
Smile you my ſpeeches, as I were a fool? Shakeſp.

Epileptick ought to breathe a pure air, unaffected with any ſteams, even ſuch as are very fragrant. Arbuthnot on Diet.

E'PILOGUE. n. ſ. [epilogus, Latin.] The poem or ſpeech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no buſh, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do uſe good buſhes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. Shakeſp.

Are you mad, you dog?
I am to riſe and ſpeak the epilogue. Dryden.

EPINY'CTIS. n. ſ. [ἐπινυκτις.] A ſore at the corner of the eye.

The epinyctis is of the bigneſs of a lupin, of a darkiſh red, and ſometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain. Wiſeman's Surg.

EPIPHANY. n. ſ. [ἐπιφανια.] A church feſtival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Chriſtmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifeſted to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing ſtar, which conducted the magi to the place where he was. Dict.

EPIPHONE'MA. n. ſ. [ἐπιφωνημα.] An exclamation; a concluſive ſentence not cloſely connected with the words foregoing

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to ſkip over all ſentences where he ſpied a note of admiration at the end. If thoſe preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance and the other aſleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the iſles; who, if they be ſincere, may probably groan at the ſound. Swift.

EPI'PHORA. n. ſ. [ἐπιφορα.] An inflammation of any part, but more eſpecially a defluxion of humours on the eyes. Harris.

EPIPHYLLOSPE'RMOUS. adj. [from ἐπι, φυλλον and σπειρμα.] Is applied to plants that bear their ſeed on the back part of their leaves. Harris.

EPI'PHYSIS. n. ſ. [ἐπιφυσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by ſimple contiguity, without any proper articulation. Quincy.

The epiphyſis of the os femoris is a diſtinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite. Wiſeman.

EPI'PLOCE. n. ſ. [ἐπιπλοκη.] A figure of rhetorick, by which one aggravation, or ſtriking circumſtance, is added in due gradation to another; as, he not only ſpared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPI'SCOPACY. n. ſ. [epiſcopatus, Latin.] The government of biſhops, the government of the church eſtabliſhed by the apoſtles.

The biſhops durſt not conteſt with the aſſembly in juriſdiction; ſo that there was little more than the name of epiſcopacy preſerved. Clarendon.

Prelacy itſelf cannot be proved by preſcription, ſince epiſcopacy is not preſcribed by any time whatſoever. Ayliffe.

EPI'SCOPAL. adj. [from epiſcopus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a biſhop.

The plot of diſcipline ſought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away epiſcopal juriſdiction. Hooker.

2. Veſted in a biſhop.

The apoſtle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himſelf, but to uſe his epiſcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men. Rogers.

EPI'SCOPATE. n. ſ. [epoſcopatus, Latin.] A biſhoprick; the office and dignity of a biſhop.

E'PISODE. n. ſ. [ἐπισοδη.] An incidental narrative, or digreſſion in a poem, ſeparable from the main ſubject, yet riſing naturally from it.

The poem hath no other epiſodes than ſuch as naturally ariſe from the ſubject. Addiſon's Spectator.

EPISO'DICAL. } adj. [from epiſode.] Con-
EPISO'DICK. } tained in an epiſode; pertaining to an epiſode.

Epiſodical ornaments, ſuch as deſcriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the obſervations of Ariſtotle. Dryden.

I diſcover the difference between the epiſodick and principal action, as well as the nature of epiſodes Notes on the Odyſſey.

EPISPA'STICK. n. ſ. [ἐπι and σπαω.]

1. Drawing.

2. Bliſtering. This is now the more frequent, though leſs proper ſenſe.

This matter ought to be ſolicited to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epiſpaticks, and bliſtering. Arbuthnot.

EPI'STLE. n. ſ. [ἐπιστολη] A letter. This word is ſeldom uſed but in poetry, or on occaſions of dignity and ſolemnity.

When looſe epiſtles violate chaſte eves,
She half conſents, who ſilently denies. Dryden.

EPI'STOLARY. adj. [from epiſtle.]

1. Relating to letters; ſuitable to letters.

E'PITHET. n. ſ. [ἐπιθετον.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head.

I affirm with phlegm, leaving the epithets of falſe, ſcandalous, and villainous, to the author. Swift.

2. It is uſed by ſome writers improperly for title, name.

The epithet of ſhades belonged more properly to the darkneſs than the refreſhment. Decay of Piety.

3. It is uſed improperly for phraſe, expreſſion.

For which of my good parts did you firſt ſuffer love for me?——

Suffer love! a good epithet: I do ſuffer love indeed, for I love thee againſt my will. Shakeſpeare.

EPI'TOME. n. ſ. [ἐπιτομη.] Abridgement; abbreviature; compendious abſtract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of your's,
Which, by th' interpretation of full time,
May ſhew like all yourſelf. Shakeſ. Coriolanus.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private uſe; but ſet forth for publick monuments, accuſe the induſtrious writers of delivering much impertinency. Wotton.

It would be well, if there were a ſhort and plain epitome made containing the moſt material heads. Locke.

Such abſtracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places. Watts's Improvem. of the Mind.

To E'PITOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abſtract; to contract into a narrow ſpace.

Who did the whole world's ſoul contract, and drove
Into the glaſſes of your eyes;
So made ſuch mirrours and ſuch ſpies,
That they did all to you epitomiſe. Donne.

If the ladies take a liking to ſuch a diminutive race, we ſhould ſee mankind epitomized, and the whole ſpecies in miniature. Addiſon.

2. Leſs properly, to diminiſh by amputation; to curtail.

We have epitomized many particular words to the detriment of our tongue. Addiſon's Spectator.

EPI'TOMISER. } n. ſ. [from epitomiſe.] An
EPI'TOMIST. } abridger; an abſtracter; a writer of epitomes.

E'POCH. } n. ſ. [ἐποχη.] The time at
EPO'CHA. } which a new computation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moſes diſtinctly computes by certain intervals, memorable æras and epochas, or terms of time. Brown.

Theſe are the practiſes of the world ſince the year ſixty; the grand epoch of falſhood, as well as debauchery. Swift.

Some lazy ages, loſt in ſleep and eaſe,
No action leave to buſy chronicles:
Such whoſe ſupine felicity but makes
In ſtory chaſms, in epochas miſtakes. Dryden.

Their ſeveral epochas or beginnings, as from the creation of the world from the flood, from the olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from ſome remarkable paſſage or accident, give us a plain proſpect into the hiſtories of antiquity and of ſeveral ages. Holder on Time.

Time is always reckoned from ſome known part of this ſenſible world, and from ſome certain epoch marked out to us by the motions obſervable in it. Locke.

Time, by neceſſity compell'd, ſhall go
Through ſcenes of war, and epochas of woe. Prior.

EPO'DE. n. ſ. [ἐποδος.] The ſtanza following the ſtrophe and antiſtrophe.

EPOPE'E. n. ſ. [ἐποποια.] An epick or heroick poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopee, and that which borrows is of leſs dignity, becauſe it has not its own. Dryden's Virgil.

EPULA'TION. n. ſ. [epulatio, Latin.] Banquet; feaſt.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he deſired no other addition than a piece of cheeſe. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

EPULO'TICK. n. ſ. [ἐπουλωτικος.] A cicatriſing medicament.

The ulcer, incarned with common ſarcoticks, the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment, and ſuch like epuloticks. Wiſeman of Ulcers.

EQUABI'LITY. n. ſ. [from equable.] Equality to itſelf; evenneſs; uniformity.

For the celeſtial bodies the equability and conſtancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wiſdom. Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Aſiaticks lazy. Arbuthnot on Air

E'QUABLE. adj. [æquabilis, Latin.] Equal to itſelf; even; uniform in reſpect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vaſt body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe repreſents it, to be every where ſmooth and equable, and as plain as the elyſian fields. Bentley.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too ſwift nor too ſlow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too ſlow an acid acrimony. Arbuthnot.

E'QUABLY. adj. [from equable.] Uniformly; in the ſame tenour; evenly; equally to itſelf.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the ſquares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their diſtances from the common centre, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the ſquares of the diſtances. Cheyne.

E'QUAL. adj. [æqualis, Latin.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits compariſon; neither greater nor leſs; neither worſe nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyſelf equal with them. Eccluſ.

Equal lot
May join us; equal joy, as equal love. Milton.

Although there were no man to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles. Hale.

2. Adequate to any purpoſe.

The Scots truſted not their own numbers as equal to fight with the Engliſh. Clarendon.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears,
At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears;
An equal temper in his mind he found,
When fortune flatter'd him, and when ſhe frown'd. Dryden.

Think not of me, perhaps my equal mind
May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me. Smith.

4. In juſt proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendation equal to your merit. Dryden's Fab. Dedication.

5. Impartial; neutral.

Each to his proper fortune ſtand or fall;
Equal and unconcern'd I look on all:
Rutilians, Trojans, are the ſame to me,
And both ſhall draw the lots their fates decree.
Dryden's Æn.

6. Indifferent.

They who are not diſpoſed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He ſubmitted himſelf, and ſware to all equal conditions. Mac.

8. Being upon the ſame terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged alſo, equal in ſpoils with themſelves. Mac.

QUAL. n. ſ. [from the adjective.]

He is enamoured on Hero: I pray you, diſſuade him from her; ſhe is no equal for his birth. Shakeſpeare's Much Ado.

He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome. 2 Mac. ix. 15.

Thoſe who were once his equals, envy and deſame him, becauſe they now ſee him their ſuperior; and thoſe who were once his ſuperiors, becauſe they look upon him as their equal. Addiſon.

To my dear equal in my native land,
My plighted vow I gave: I his received:
Each with truth, with pleaſure each believ'd:
The contract was to heav'n convey'd. Prior.

2. The ſame age.

I profited in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation. Gal. i. 14.

To E'QUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or perſon equal to another.

2. To riſe to to the ſame ſtate with another perſon.

I know no body ſo like to equal him, even at the age he wrote moſt of them, as yourſelf. Trumbull to Pope.

Nor you great queen, theſe offices repent,
Which he will equal, and perhaps augment. Dryd.

To E'QUALISE. v. a. [from equal]

1. To make even.

To equaliſe accounts we will allow three hundred years, and ſo long a time as we can manifeſt from the Scripture. Bro.

2. To be equal to: a ſenſe not uſed.

That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigneſs, to equaliſe and fit a thing bigger than it is. Digby.

Ye lofty beeches tell this matchleſs dame,
That if together ye led all one flame,
It could not equaliſe the hundredth part
Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart. Waller.

EQUA'LITY. n. ſ. [from equal.]

1. Likeneſs with regard to any quantities compared.

Equality of two domeſtick powers,
Breeds ſcrupulous faction. Shakeſp. Anth. and Cleop.

2. The ſame degree of dignity.

One ſhall riſe,
Of proud ambition; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal ſtate,
Will arrogate dominion undeſerv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himſelf, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependance. Swift.

3. Evenneſs; uniformity; conſtant tenour; equability.

Meaſure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in conſtitutions, and forget that variety which phyſicians therein diſcover. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

E'QUALLY. adv. [from equal.]

1. In the ſame degree with another perſon or thing; alike.

To reconcile men's vices to their fears is the aim of all the various ſchemes and projects of ſin, and is equally intended by atheiſm and immorality. Rogers.

The covetous are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteouſneſs, as if they were indeed poor. Rogers.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly.

If the motion of the ſun were as unequal as of a ſhip, ſometimes ſlow, and at others ſwift; or, if being conſtantly equally ſwift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the ſame appearances, it would not help us to meaſure time more than the motion of a comet does. Locke.

3. Impartially.

We ſhall uſe them,
As we ſhall find their merits and our ſafety
May equally determine. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

E'QUALNESS. n. ſ. [from equal.] Equality.

Let me lament
That our ſtars unreconcileable ſhould have divided
Our equalneſs to this. Shakeſpeare.

EQUANI'MITY. n. ſ. [æquanimitas, Lat.] Evenneſs of mind, neither elated nor depreſſed.

EQUA'NIMOUS. adj. [æquanimis, Lat.] Even; not dejected; not elated.

EQUA'TION. n. ſ. [æquare, Lat.] The inveſtigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of exceſs and defect, to be applied to the whole.

We are to find out the extremities on both ſides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the ſun along the Ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or ſubſtraction, as the caſe ſhall require. Holder on Time.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipſes of Jupiter's ſatellites, it ſeems that light is propagated in time, ſpending in its paſſage from the ſun to us about ſeven minutes of time. Newton's Opticks.

EQUA'TION. [In algebra.] Is an expreſſion of the ſame quantity in two diſſimilar terms, but of equal value; as $3s. = 36d.$ Dict.

EQUA'TION. [In aſtronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the ſun's apparent motion, and the time that is meaſured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjuſted. Dict.

EQUA'TOR. n. ſ. [æquator, Lat.] The equator on the earth, or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whoſe poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and ſouthern hemiſpheres. It paſſes through the eaſt and weſt points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raiſed as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the ſun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, becauſe he then riſes due eaſt and ſets due weſt, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reaſon of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot diſcover both the poles: neither would the eye, under the poles, diſcover the ſun in the equator. Brown's Vulg. Err.

On the other ſide the equator there is much land ſtill remaining undiſcovered. Ray on the Creation.

Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy riſe,
Whence many a burſting ſtream auriferous plays. Thomſon.

EQUATO'RIAL. adj. [from equator.] Pertaining to the equator; taken at the equator.

The planets have ſpheroidical figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their ecliptick planes. Cheyne.

EQUICRU'RE. } tin.

1. Having legs of an equal length.

2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the baſe; iſoſceles.

An equicrure triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth, Digby on the Soul.

We ſucceſſively draw lines from angle to angle until ſeven equicrural triangles be deſcribed. Brown.

EQUIDI'STANT.

EQUIDI'STANT. adj. [æquus and distant, Latin.] At the same distance.

EQUIDI'STANTLY. adv. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.

The fixt stars are not all placed in the same concave superficies, and equidistant from us, as they seem to be. Ray.

The liver, seated on the right side, by the subclavian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm. Brown.

EQUIFORMITY. n. s. [æquus and forma, Latin.] Uniform equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

EQUILA'TERAL. adj. [æquus and latus, Latin.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser. Bacon.

Trifling futility appears in their twelve signs of the zodiack and their aspects: why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures? Bentley.

To EQUILI'BRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affriction been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetick needle. Boyle's Experiments.

The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with the water in which they swim. Arbuthnot on Air.

EQUILIBRA'TION. n. s. [from equilibrate.] Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, pertub not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

In so great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are observed. Derham.

EQUILI'BRIUM. n. s. [Latin.]

1. Equipoise; equality of weight.
2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

Things are not left to an equilibrium, to hover under an indifference whether they shall come to pass, or not come to pass. South.

It is in equilibrio
If deities descend or no;
Then let th' affirmative prevail,
As requisite to form my tale. Prior.

Health consists in the equilibrium between those two powers, when the fluids move so equally that they don't press upon the solids with a greater force than they can bear. Arbuthnot.

EQUINE'CESSARY. adj. [æquus and necessarius, Lat.] Needful in the same degree.

For both to give blows and to carry,
In fights, are equinecessary Hudibras.

EQUINO'CTIAL. n. s. [æquus and nox, Lat.] The line that encompasses the world at an equal distance from either pole, to which circle when the sun comes, he makes equal days and nights all over the globe; the same with equator.

EQUINO'CTIAL. adj. [from equinox.]

1. Pertaining to the equinox.

Thrice th' equinoctial line
He circled; four times cross'd the car of night
From pole to pole, traversing each colure. Milton.

Some say the sun
Was bid turn reins from th' equinoctial road,
Like distant breadth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Happening about the time of the equinoxes.
3. Being near the equinoctial line; having the properties of things near the equator.

In vain they cover shades and Thracia's gales,
Pining with equinoctial heat. Philips.

EQUINO'CTIALLY. adv. [from equinoctial.] In the direction of the equinoctial.

They may be refrigerated inclanately, or somewhat equinoctially; that is, towards the eastern and western points. Brown.

E'QUINOX. n. s. [æquus and nox, Lat.]

1. Equinoxes are the precise times in which the sun enters into the first point of Aries and Libra; for then, moving exactly under the equinoctial, he makes our days and nights equal. This he doth twice a year, about the 21st of March and 23d of September, which therefore are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. Harris.

It ariseth not heliacally about the autumnal equinox. Brown.

The time when this kid was taken out of the womb was about the vernal equinox. Ray.

'Twas now the month in which the world began,
If March beheld the first created man;
And since the vernal equinox, the sun
In Aries twelve degrees or more had run. Dryden.

2. Equality; even measure. Improper.

Do but see his vice;
'Tis to his virtues a just equinox,
The one as long as th' other. Shakespeare's Othello

3. Equinoctial wind: a poetical use.

The passage yet was good; the wind, 'tis true,
Was somewhat high, but that was nothing new,
No more than usual equinoxes blew. Dryden.

EQUINU'MERANT. adj. [æquus and numerus, Lat.] Having the same number; consisting of the same number.

This talent of gold, though not equinumerant, nor yet equiponderant, as to any other; yet was equivalent to some correspondent talent in brass. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To EQUIP. v. a. [equipper, French.]

1. To furnish for a horseman or cavalier.
2. To furnish; to accoutre; to dress out.

The country are led astray in following the town; and equipped in a ridiculous habit, when they fancy themselves in the height of the mode. Addison.

E'QUIPAGE. n. s. [equipage, French.]

1. Furniture for a horseman.
2. Carriage of state; vehicle.

Winged spirits, and chariots wing'd,
From th' armory of God; where stand of old

ESCUAGE. n. ſ. [from eſcu, French, a ſhield.]

Eſcuage, that is, ſervice of the ſhield, is either uncertain or certain. Eſcuage uncertain is likewiſe twofold: firſt, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in perſon to the king's wars ſo many days. The days of ſuch ſervice ſeem to have been rated by the quantity of the land ſo holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was ſo much land as, in thoſe days, was accounted a ſufficient living for a knight; and that was ſix hundred and eighty acres as ſome think, or eight hundred as others, or 15*l. per annum*. Sir Thomas Smith ſaith, that cenſus equeſtris is 40*l.* revenue in free lands. If the land extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord but twenty days. The other kind of this eſcuage uncertain is called Caſtleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a caſtle. Eſcuage certain is where the land is ſet at a certain ſum of money to be paid for ſuch uncertain ſervices. Cowel.

ESCULENT. adj. [eſculentus, Latin.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would faſt five days; but the ſame man uſed to have continually a great wiſp of herbs that he ſmelled on, and ſome eſculent herbs of ſtrong ſcent, as garlick. Bacon.

ESCULENT. n. ſ. Something fit for food.

This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the eſculent, as radiſh and parſnips, it will make the root the greater, and ſo it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the eſculent, by ſtrengthening the root, it will make the fruit the greater. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

ESPA'LIER. n. ſ. Trees planted and cut ſo as to join.

Translating the first of Homer's Iliads, I intended as an essay to the whole work. Dryden's Fab. Pref.

E'SSENCE. n. s. [essentia, Latin.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in Winter has an essence; in Summer it has existence also. Watts's Log.

One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;
Another, blood diffus'd about the heart;
Another faith, the elements conspire,
And to her essence each doth give a part. Davies.

I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence.
More's Divine Dialogues.

He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties.
South.

2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.

The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of Christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular Christian man. Hooker.

3. Existence; the quality of being.

In such cogitations have I stood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence. Sidney.

4. Being; existent person.

As far as gods, and heav'nly essences
Can perish. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. Species of existent being.

Here be four of you as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends: as for Lupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion he may be the fifth essence. Bacon.

6. Constituent substance.

For spirits when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure;
Not ty'd or manacled with joint or limb. Milton.

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.

She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakes.

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.

9. Perfume; odour; scent.

To save the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale. Pope.

To ESSENCE. v. a. [from essence.] To perfume; to scent.

The husband rails, from morning to night, at essenced fops and tawdry courtiers. Addison's Spect.

ESSE'NTIAL. adj. [essentialis, Latin.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.

The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.

From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Spratt.

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immaterial and divine power. Bentley.

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion; but conceals an essential circumstance, upon on which the whole weight of the matter turns. Swift.

And if each ſyſtem in gradation roll,
Alike eſſential to th' amazing whole,
The leaſt confuſion but in one, not all
That ſyſtem only, but the whole muſt fall. Pope.

2. Important in the higheſt degree; principal.

Judgment's more eſſential to a general,
Than courage. Denham's Sophy.

3. Pure; highly rectified; ſubtilely elaborated; extracted ſo as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compaſs.

EXPE'RIENCE. n. ſ. [experientia, Latin.]

1. Practice; frequent trial.

Hereof experience hath informed reaſon, and time hath made thoſe things apparent which were hidden. Raleigh.

But apt the mind or fancy is to rove,
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end,
'Till warn'd, or by experience taught, ſhe learn,
That not to know at large of things remote
From uſe, obſcure and ſubtle, but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wiſdom, what is more, is fume
Or emptineſs, or fond impertinence,
And renders us in things that moſt concern
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and ſtill to ſeek. Milton.

2. Knowledge gained by trial and practice.

Boy immature in knowledge,
Pawn them experience to their preſent pleaſures.
Shakeſpeare.

But if you'll proſper, mark what I adviſe,

For when the ſun in all their pride expire,
To them firſt elements the ſouls retire. Pope.

3. To periſh; to fall; to be deſtroyed.

All thy praiſe is vain,
Save what this verſe, which never ſhall expire,
Shall to the purchaſe. Spenſer.

The dead man's knell
Is there ſcarce aſk'd, for whom; and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they ſicken. Shakeſpeare.

4. To fly out with a blaſt.

The diſtance judg'd for ſhot of every fire,
The linſtocks touch, the ponderous ball expires.
The vigorous ſeaman every porthole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.

5. To conclude; to terminate; to come to an end.

A month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Or thrice three times the value of this bond.
Shakeſpeare.

To EXPLA'IN. v. a. [explano, Latin.] To expound; to illuſtrate; to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original deſign, however we may explain it away. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind

The laſt verſe of his laſt ſatyr is not yet ſufficiently explicated. Dryden.

EXPLICATION. n. ſ. [from explicate.]

1. The act of opening: unfolding or expanding.

2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explanation.

The church preacheth, firſt publiſhing by way of teſtimony, the truth which from them ſhe hath received, written in the ſacred volumes of Scripture; ſecondly, by way of explication, diſcovering the myſteries which lie hid therein. Hooker.

Many things are needful for explication, and many for application unto particular occaſion. Hooker.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which hold only as to the main ſcope. Atterbury.

3. The ſenſe given by an explainer; interpretation.

'Tis the ſubſtance of this theory I mainly depend upon many ſingle explications and parts of it may be reſolved upon farther thoughts. Burnet.

EXPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicate.] Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the ſubject of a complex propoſition be either eſſential or any way neceſſary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the ſubject; as every mortal man is a ſon of Adam. Watts's Logick.

EXPLICATOR. n. ſ. [from explicate.] Expounder; interpreter; explainer.

EXPLICIT. adj [explicitus, Latin.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obſcure; not merely implied.

We muſt lay aſide that lazy and fallacious method of cenſuring by the lump, and bring things cloſe to explicit proof and evidence. Burnet.

Theſe ſpeculations, when moſt refined, ſerve only to ſhow how impoſſible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite. South's Sermons.

EXPLI'CITLY. adv. [from explicit.] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's diſpoſals; but where it is indulged, it uſually is its own expoſition; and explicitly avows it. Government of the Tongue.

To EXPLO'DE. v. a. [explodo, Latin.]

1. To drive out diſgracefully with ſome noiſe of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open diſdain or ſcorn.

Him old and young
Exploded, and had ſeiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud deſcending ſnatch'd him thence Unſeen amid' the throng. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

Thus was th' applauſe they meant,
Turn'd to exploding hiſs, triumph to ſhame,
Caſt on themſelves from their own mouths. Milt.

Old age explodes all but morality. Roſcommon.

There is pretended that a magnetical globe or terella, being placed upon its poles, would have a conſtant rotation; but this is commonly exploded as being againſt all experience. Wilkins.

Shall that man paſs for a proficient in Chriſt's ſchool who would have been exploded in the ſchool of Zeno? South.

Provided that no word, which a ſociety ſhall give a ſanction to, be antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they ſhall find occaſion for. Swift.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explorate their way. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

EXPLORA'TION. n. ſ. [from explorate.] Search; examination.

For exact exploration ſcales ſhould be ſuſpended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verticity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Uſe may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles ſo many modern naturaliſts. Boyle.

EXPLORA'TOR. n. ſ. [from explorate.] One who ſearches; a ſearcher; an examiner.

EXPLO'RATORY. adj. [from explorate.] Searching; examining.

To EXPLORE. v. a. [explore, Latin.] To try; to ſearch into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that ſtill endur'd not, where he ſtood
Among the mightieſt, bent on higheſt deeds,
And thus his own and unmated heart explores. Milt.

Divers opinion I have been inclined to queſtion not only as a naturaliſt, but as a chymiſt, whether they be agreeable to ſure grounds of philoſophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire Boyle.

But Capys, and the reſt of founder mind,
The fatal preſent to the flames deſign'd,
Or to the wat'ry deep; at leaſt to bore
The hollow ſides, and hidden hands explore.
Dryden's Æn.

The mighty Stagyrite firſt left the ſhore,
Spread all his ſails and duſt the deeps explore;
He ſteer'd ſecurely, and diſcover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mœonian ſtar. Pope.

EXPLO'REMENT.

EXPLO'REMENT. n. s. [from explore.] Search; trial.

The fruſtrated ſearch of Porta, upon the explorement of many, could ſcarce find one. Brown.

EXPLO'SION. n. ſ. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noiſe and violence.

Thoſe parts which abound with ſtrata of ſtone, or marble, making the ſtrongeſt oppoſition, are the moſt furiouſly ſhattered, an event obſervable not only in this, but all other exploſions whatever. Woodward.

In gunpowder the charcoal and ſulphur eaſily take fire, and ſet fire to the nitre; and the ſpirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, ruſhes out with exploſion, after the manner that the vapour of water ruſhes out of an æolipile: the ſulphur alſo, being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the exploſion. Newton's Opt.

With exploſion vaſt,
The thunder raiſes his tremenduous voice. Thomſon.

EXPLO'SIVE. adj. [from explode.] Driving out with noiſe and violence.

Theſe minerals conſtitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the aſſiſtance of its exploſive power renders the ſhock greater. Woodward.

EXPO'NENT. n. ſ. [from expono, Latin.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent ariſing when the antecedent is divided by the conſequent: thus ſix is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Alſo a rank of numbers in arithmetical progreſſion, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progreſſion, are called indices or exponents: and in this is founded the reaſon and demonſtration of logarithms; for addition and ſubtraction of theſe exponents anſwers to multiplication and diviſion in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONE'NTIAL. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are ſuch as partake both of the nature of algebraick and tranſcendential ones. They partake of the former, becauſe they conſiſt of a finite number of terms though thoſe terms themſelves are indeterminate; and they are in ſome meaſure tranſcendental, becauſe they cannot be algebraically conſtructed. Harris.

To EXPO'RT. v. a. [exporto, Latin.] To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint buſineſs for want of ſecrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

Edward III by his encouragement of trade, turned the ſcale ſo much in favour of Engliſh merchandiſe, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thouſand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thouſand. Addiſ. Freeh.

Great ſhips brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes. Arbuthnot.

E'XPORT. n. ſ. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPORTA'TION. n. ſ. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cauſe of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulneſs of ſoil to produce neceſſaries, not only ſufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

EXPO'RTER. n. ſ. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in oppoſition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each ſpecies be by the law bigger or leſs. Locke.

To EXPO'SE. v. a. [expono, expoſitum, Lat. expoſer, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.

Take Phyſic, Pomp;
Expoſe thyſelf to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'ſt ſhake the ſuperflux to them,
And ſhew Heaven juſt. Shakeſpeare's King Lear.

Who here
Will envy whom the higheſt place expoſes
Foremoſt to ſtand againſt the Thunderer's aim? Milton.

To paſs the riper period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded ſtage,
To laſting toils expoſ'd, and endleſs cares,
To open dangers, and to ſecret ſnares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But ſtill he held his purpoſe to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
He would not to the ſeas expoſe his wife, Dryden.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a ſtate of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beaſts, by nature ſtrong, renew their love;
Then fields the blades of buried corn diſcloſe,
And while the balmy weſtern ſpirit blows,
Earth to the breath her boſom dares expoſe. Dryden.

4. To lay open, to cenſure or ridicule; to ſhew in ſuch a ſtate as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expoſe the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryd. Juv. Dedic.

Tully has juſt expoſed a precept, that a man ſhould live with his friend in ſuch a manner that if he became his enemy, it ſhould not be in his power to hurt him. Addiſon's Spectator.

A fool might once himſelf alone expoſe,
Now one in verſe makes many more in proſe. Pope.

Your fame and your property ſuffer alike, you are at once expoſed and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Thoſe who ſeek truth only, freely expoſe their principles to the teſt, and are pleaſed to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

2. Ground lying at rest.
Within an ancient forest's ample verge,
There stands a lonely but a healthful dwelling,
Built for convenience, and the use of life;
Around it fallows, meads, and pastures fair,
A little garden, and a limpid brook,
By nature's own contrivance seems disposed. Rowe

To FA'LLOW. v. a. To plow in order to a second plowing.
Begin to plow up fallows: this first fallowing ought to be very shallow. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FA'LLOWNESS. n. s. [from fallow.] Barrenness; an exemption from bearing fruit.
Like one, who, in her third widowhood, doth profess.
Herself a nun, tyed to retiredness,
So' affects my muse now a chaste fallowness. Donne

FALSE. adj. [falsus, Latin; faux, fausse, French.]

1. Not morally true; expressing that which is not thought.
Innocence shall make
False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
There are false witnesses among men. L'Estrange.

2. Not physically true; conceiving that which does not exist.
For how can that be false, which ev'ry tongue
Of ev'ry mortal man affirms for true?
Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,
As loadstone like, all hearts it ever drew. Davies.
A farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and action of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsisting with the characters of mankind. Dryden.

3. Succedaneous; suppositious.

Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive.
Donne

7. Treacherous, perfidious; traiterous; deceitful; hollow.
I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name. Shakesp. Macbeth.
False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand. Shak.
A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain, that man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him. Bacon's Hen. VI.
So hast thou cheated Theseus with a wile,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who let the tree. Dryden
The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido. Dryd.

8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real; as a false diamond.
False tears true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his fetters. Dryden's Æn.

9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.

FALSE. adv. Not truly; not honestly; not exactly; falsely.
What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st holily; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win. Shakesp. Macbeth.

To FALSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To violate by failure of veracity.
Is't not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsed hath thy faith with perjury? Fairy Q.

2. To deceive.
Fair seemly pleasance each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;
And in his falsed fancy he her takes
To be the fairest wight that lived yet. Fairy Queen.

3. To make feints; as fencers commonly do.
But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wise, and closely did await
Advantage, whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes athwart, sometime he stroke him strait,
And falsed oft his blows t'illude him with such bait.
Fairy Queen.

4. This word is now out of use.

FALSEHEA'RTED. adj. [false and heart.] Treacherous, perfidious; deceitful; hollow.
The traiterous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and false-hearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, he noted. Bacon

FA'LSEHOOD. n. s. [from false.]

1. Want of truth; want of veracity.
Artificer of fraud; he was the first
That practis'd falsehood under saintly show. Milton.
All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things. South.

2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.
Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and colour serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heavenly form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, snare them. Milton.

3. A lie; a false assertion.
In your answers there remains falsehood. Job.

4. Counterfeit; imposture.
For no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness. Milton.

FA'LSELY. adv. [from false.]

1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.
Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing proselytes and religion. Gov. of Tongue.
Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whose fleet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast,
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim. Dryd.
Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;
Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least
He would have giv'n one day to my request. Dryden.
Such as are treated ill and upbraided falsely find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to sooth their secret resentments. Addison's Spectator.

2. Erroneously; by mistake.
He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us. Smalridge's Sermons.

3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.

FA'LSENESS. n. s. [from false.]

1. Contrariety to truth.

2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.
Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tillotson.

3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or foulness of intention; especially to perfonated devotion, Harmon's Fund. mentals.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traiterousness.
King Richard might create a perfect guess,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness. Shak.
The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.

FA'LSER. n. s. [from false.] A deceiver; An hypocrite. Now obsolete.
Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does all them remain,
That of such falser's friendship been fain. Spenser.

FALSIFIABLE. adj. [from falsify.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.

FALSIFICA'TION. n. s. [falsification, French, from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.
Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hooker.
To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications, except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits Divine honour. Bacon.

2. Confutation.
The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this isle, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Broome.

FA'LSIFIER. n. s. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.
It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs. Boyle.

2. A liar; one that contrives falſehoods.
Boaſters are naturally falſifiers, and the people, of all others that put their ſhams the worſt together. L'Eſtrange.

To FA'LSIFY. v. a. [falſifier, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce ſomething for that which in reality it is not.
We cannot excuſe that church, which through corrupt tranſlations of ſcripture, delivereth, inſtead of divine ſpeeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God ſpeaketh; or, though falſified additions, propoſeth that to the people of God as Scripture, which is in truth no Scripture. Hooker.
The Iriſh bards uſe to forge and falſify every thing as they liſt, to pleaſe or diſpleaſe any man. Spenſer
Falſifying the balance by deceit. Amos.

2. To confute; to prove falſe.
Our Saviour's prophecy ſtands good in the deſtruction of the temple, and the diſſolution of the Jewiſh œconomy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apoſtate, to baffle and falſify the prediction. Addiſon

3. To violate; to break by falſehood.
It ſhall be thy work, thy ſhameful work, which is in thy power to ſhun, to make him live to ſee thy faith falſified, and his bed defiled. Sidney.
He ſuddenly falſified his faith, and villainouſly ſlew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himſelf, miſtruſting nothing leſs than the falſehood of the pirate. Knolles's Hiſtory.
This ſuperadds treachery to all the other petulent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falſifying the moſt important truſt. Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.
His creſt he raiſh'd away, his ample ſhield
Is falſify'd, and round with jav'lins hill'd. Dryden.
Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrelled at the word falſified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confeſſed; for I remember not to have read it in any Engliſh author, though perhaps it may be found in Spenſer's Fairy Queen. But ſuppoſe it be not there: why am I bahdid'en to borrow from the Italian, a poliſhed language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, ſi græco fonte cadant eſpecially when other words are joyned with them which explain the ſenſe I uſed the word falſify, in this place, to mean that the ſhield of Turnus was not of proof againſt the ſpears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain

Mah! Vſbergo d' Ambiera perfetto,
Che mai poteo fallatlo in neſſun canto,
Ariоſto, cant. xxvi.

Falſar cannot otherwiſe be turned than by falſified: for his ſhield was falſed, is not Engliſh. I might indeed have contented myſelf with ſaying his ſhield was pierced, and bored, and ſtuck with javelins. Dryden.
Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturaliſe the new ſignification, which I have never ſeen copied, except once by ſome obſcure nameleſs writer, and which indeed deſerves not to be received.

To FA'LSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.
This point have we gained, that it is abſolutely and univerſally unlawful to lie and falſify. South

FA'LSITY. n. ſ. [falſitas, Latin.]
Neither are they able to break through thoſe errours, wherein they are ſo determinately ſettled, that they pay unto falſity the whole ſum of whatſoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker.
Can you on him ſuch falſities obtrude?
And as a mortal the moſt wiſe delude? Sandys.
Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falſity of things; but only imports a different degree of them clearneſs or appearance to the underſtanding. South.

2. A lye; an errour; a falſe aſſertion or poſition.
That Danubius ariſeth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the north, are opinions truly charged on Ariſtotle by the reſtorer of Epicurus, and all eaſily confutable falſities. Glanville's Sceppſis.

To FA'LTER. v. n. [faltar, to be wanting, Spaniſh; vaultur, a ſtammerer, Iſlandick, which is probably a word from the ſame radical.]

1. To heſitate in the utterance of words.
With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth ſhe. Fairy Queen.
The pale aſſiſtants on each other ſtar'd,
With gaping mouths for iſſuing words prepar'd;
The ſtill-born ſounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryd.
He changes, gods! and falters at the queſtion:
His fears, his words, his look, declare him guilty. Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.
The earth ſhall have a feeling; and theſe ſtones
Prove armed ſoldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shakeſp.
He found his legs falter. Wiſeman's Surgery.

3. To fail in any act of the underſtanding.
How far idiots are concerned in the want or weakneſs of any or all faculties, an exact obſervation of their ſeveral ways of faltering would diſcover. Locke.

To FA'LTER. v. a. To ſift; to cleanſe. This word ſeems to be merely ruſtick or provincial.
Barley for malt muſt be bold, dry, ſweet, and clean faltered from foulneſs, ſeeds and oats. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

FAN. n. s. [vannus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With hearts, and fans, and double change of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knav'ry Shakespeare

Flavia, the least and slightest toy
Can with resistless art employ:
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force in love;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or falsely seen,
Directs its wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow?
Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
To every other breast a flame. Gay.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And Virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before Pope

Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The Norweyan banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The air
Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:
From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,
Till ev'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blow;
To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose:
The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose. Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,
And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves. Dryden.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her panting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which, fann'd,
The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand
In judgment. Milton.

FANA'TICISM. n. s. [from fanatick.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the Scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other, has triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Rogers.

FANA'TICK. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, Fr.] Enthusiastick; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abus'd
Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek
Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton.

FANA'TICK. n. s. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast: a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine, than the curriculary weapon snatcht up by a fanatick. Decay of Piety.

FA'NCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Dictated by the imagination, not the reason: full of wild images: of things.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings? and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward.

It would show as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it. Garth.

FA'NCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FA'NCIFULNESS. n. s. [from fanciful.] Addiction to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale.

FA'NCY. n. s. [contract from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; φαντασία.] It should be phansy.

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations sentation of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakespeare, fancy's sweetest child!
Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton.

In the soul
Are many lesser faculties, that serve
Reason as chief: among these fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,
Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence which give as full satisfaction, and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:
Whom we now a goddess call,
Divinely grac'd in every feature,
Straight's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;
Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon.

I have always held a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel calls the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Inclination, liking; fondness.

He fancy was extremely to travelling. L'Estrange.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will.
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life. Shakespeare.

Any such force in human opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection. Collier.

6. In Shakespeare it signifies love.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shakesp. Merch. of Ven.

7. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden.

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbuthnot.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. False notion.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusions, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. Bacon's Natural Hist.

9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.

London-pride is a pretty fancy for borders. Mortimer.

To FA'NCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Strutt's Sermons.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

To FA'NCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;
Who mighty thought can clothe with manly dress,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express. Dryden.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Nimus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband. Raleigh.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleaseth to fancy. Swift.

FA'NCYMONGER. n. s. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him. Shakesp.

FA'NCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unsound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come to be fancysick, there's no cure. L'Estrange.

FAND for found. It is retained in Scotland.

Thir when as true by tryal he out fand,
He bade to open wide his brazen gate. Spenser.

FA'NE. n. s. [fane, French; fanum, Latin.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion. A poetical word.

Nor fane nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege! Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now she seem'd. Dryden's Æn.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,
Who with their worries in one ruin hurl'd. Philips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb. Tickell.

The fields are ravish'd from the industrious swains,
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes.
Pope.

FANG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held: any thing like 'em.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no flattery. Shakesp. As you like it.

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or tusks; as boars, pikes, salmons, and dogs, though less. Bacon's Natural Hist.

Prepar'd to fly,
The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain. Dryd.

Then charge, provoke the lion to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison.

2. The nails; the talons.

Brave warrior, our bleak climes unknown,
Beneath the confines of the freezing zone,
And born to far Orcadian ſkies,
To try the Lapland heat, or Scythian cold. Dryd.

2. It was formerly uſed not only as an adverb but an adjective, with off.

Thoſe thoughts are ſmall and unſubſtantial,
I like far off mountains turned into clouds. Sandys.
If we may ſchool us any creature any one ſpirk of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightneſs, the tame in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived. Raleigh.

3. from FAR. In this ſenſe it is uſed elliptically for a far, or remote place.

The Lord ſhall bring a nation againſt thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deut. xxviii. 49.

4. Remoter of the two; in horſemanſhip, the right ſide of the horſe, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.

The nations far and near center'd in choice.
Dryden.

FAR. n. ſ. [contracted from farrow.] The offſpring of a ſow; young pigs.

Sows ready to farrow at this time of the year,
Are for to be made of and counted full dear;
For now is the loſs of the far of the ſow
More great than the loſs of two calves of the cow.
Tuſſer.

To FARCE. v. a. [farcio, Latin; farcir, French.]

1. To ſtuff; to fill with mingled ingredients.

Wreſtling is a paſtime which either the Corniſhmen derived from Corineus, their firſt pretended founder, or at leaſt it miniſtred ſome ſtuff to the farcing of that fable. Carew.
The firſt principles of Chriſtian religion ſhould not be farced with ſchool points and private tenets. Bp. Sanderſon.

2. To extend; to ſwell out.

'Tis not the balm, the ſceptre, and the ball,
The ſword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The enterlu'd robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running 'fore the king. Shakeſp.

FARCE. n. ſ. [from the verb; or from farcer, French, to mock.] A dramatick repreſentation written without regularity, and ſtuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower ſort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry, which groteſque is in a picture: the perſons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners falſe, that is, inconſiſtent with the character of mankind: groteſque painting is the juſt reſemblance of this. Dryden's Dufreſnoy.
What ſhould be great, you turn to farce. Prior.
They object againſt it as a farce, becauſe the improbability of the plot ſhould anſwer to the extravagance of the character, which they ſay this piece wants, and therefore is no farce. Gay.

FA'RCICAL. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce, appropriated to a farce.

They deny the characters to be farcical, becauſe they are actually in nature. Gay.

Who would fardels bear,
To groan and ſweat under a weary life? Shakeſ.

To FARE. v. n. [ꝑapan, Saxon; varen, Dutch.]

1. To go; to paſs; to travel.

At laſt, reſolving forward ſtill to fare,
Until the bluſt'ring ſtorm is overblown. Fairy Qu.
His ſpirit pure were ſubject to our ſight,
Like to a man in ſhew and ſhape he fared. Fanſax.
Soon he fares, and to the border comes
Of Eden. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.
Sadly they far'd along the ſea-beat ſhore;
Still to wiſh'd them hearts. Pope.

2. To be in any ſtate good or bad.

So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend.
Fairy Queen.
A ſtubborn heart ſhall fare evil at the laſt. Eccleſ.
Well fare the hand, which to our humble ſight
Preſents that beauty. Waller.
So in this throng bright Sachariſſa far'd,
Oppreſs'd by thoſe who ſtrove to be her guard:
As ſhips, though never ſo obſequious, fall
Foul on a tempeſt on their admiral. Waller.
So fares the ſtag among th' enraged hounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds.
Denham.
But as a barque, that, in foul weather,
Toſs'd by two adverſe winds together,
Is beat'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppoſe. Hudibras.
If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare.
L'Eſtrange.
That fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidſt the crowd. Dryden's Æn.
Engliſh miniſters never fare ſo well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and animoſities of the nation. Addiſon.
Some are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they ſhall fare no worſe than their neighbours. Swift.

3. To proceed in any train of conſequences good or bad.

Thus it fareth when too much deſire of contradiction cauſeth our ſpeeches rather to paſs by number than to ſtay for weight. Hooker.

So fares it when with truth falſehood contends.
Milton.

4. To happen to any one well or ill: with it preceding in an impersonal form.

When the hand finds itſelf well warm'd and covered, let it refuſe the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head, 'till the body be ſtarved or killed, and then we ſhall ſee how it will fare with the hand. South.

5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.

The rich man fared ſumptuouſly every day. Luke.
Feaſt your ears with the muſick awhile, if they will fare ſo hardly as on the trumpet's ſound.
Shakeſpeare's Timon.
Men think they have fared hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have deſcended ſo low as to eat dogs; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

FARE. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Price of paſſage in a vehicle by land or by water. Uſed only of that which is paid for the perſon, not the goods.

He found a ſhip going to Tarſhiſh; ſo he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarſhiſh. Jon.
He paſſage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants, tho' faithful, what to unfaithful fare. Dryd.

2. Food prepared for the table; proviſions.

But come, to well-ſerv'd feaſts, now let us pray,
As meet is, after ſuch delicious fare. Milton.
But when the weſtern winds with vital pow'r
Call to the tender graſs and budding flow'r,
Then, at the laſt, produce to open air
Both flocks, and ſend them to their ſummer's fare.
Dryden.
This is what nature's want may well ſuffice;
He that would more is a wretch, not wiſe:
But ſince among mankind ſo few there are,
Who will conform to philoſophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy eaſe,
And mingle ſomething of our times to pleaſe. Dryd.
Upon his riſing up he ordered the peaſant to ſet before him whatever food he had in his houſe: the peaſant brought out a great deal of coarſe fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addiſon.

FAREWE'LL. adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb farewell, or fare you well; ſis felix, abi in bonam rem, or bene ſit tibi; but in time uſe familiariſed it to an adverb, and it is uſed both by thoſe who go and thoſe who are left.]

1. The parting compliment; adieu.

But farewell, king; ſith thus thou will appear,
Freedom lives hence, and baniſhment is here. Shak.
Whether we ſhall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlaſting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Caſſius. Shakeſp.
Be not amazed, call all your ſenſes to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakeſpeare.
An iron ſlumber ſhuts my ſwimming eyes;
And now farewell, involv'd in ſhades of night,
For ever I am raviſh'd from thy ſight. Dryden.
Farewell, ſays he; the parting ſound ſcarce fell
From his fair lips, but ſhe replied farewell. Dryd.
O dear remembrance, bleſſing ſtill and bleſt!
Of dear remembrance, bleſſing ſtill and bleſt! Pope.

2. It is ſometimes uſed only as an expreſſion of ſeparation without kindneſs.

Farewell the year, which threaten'd ſo
The faireſt light the world can ſhow. Waller.
Treading the path to noble ends,
A long farewell to love I gave;
Reſolv'd my country and my friends
All that remain'd of me ſhould have. Waller.

3. Its original verbal meaning is preſerved when it is uſed plurally.

Farewell, maſter Silence: I will not uſe many words with you, fare you well, gentlemen both.
Shakeſpeare's Henry IV.

FAREWE'LL. n. ſ.

1. Leave; act of departure.

See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun. Shak.
If chance the radiant sun with farewell sweet,
Extend his ev'ning beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
Attest their joy, that hill and valley ring. Milton.
As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell. Dryden.
Before I take my farewell of this subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly. Addison.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective; leave-taking.

Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Spectator

FARINA'CEOUS. adj. [from farina, Latin.] Mealy; tasting like meal or flower of corn.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panick, and millet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FARM. n. s. [ferme, French; ꝑeopm, provision, Saxon.]

1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.

Touching their particular complaint for reducing lands and farms to their ancient rents, it could not be done without a parliament. Hayward

2. The state of lands let out to the culture of tenants.

The lords of land in Ireland do not use to set out their land in farm, for term of years, to their tenants; but only from year to year, and some during pleasure. Spenser on Ireland

It is great wilfulness in landlords to make any longer farms unto their tenants. Spenser.

To FARM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To let out to tenants at a certain rent.

We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm,
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. Shakespeare's Richard II

Ev'n her, who did her numerous offspring boast,
As fair and fruitful as the sow that carry'd,
The thirty pigs at one large litter farrow'd. Dryden.

FART. n. s. [ꝑeꝛt, Saxon.] Wind from behind.

Love is the fart
Of every heart;
It pains a man when 'tis kept close;
And others doth offend, when 'tis let loose. Suckling.

To FART. v. a. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.

As when we a gun discharge,
Although the bore be ne'er so large,
Before the flame from muzzle burst,
Just at the breech it flashes first;
So from my lord his passion broke,
He farted first and then he spoke. Swift.

FA'RTHER. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analogy can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write further and furthest, from forth, forther, fortheſt, ꝑoꝛ̃ðoꝛ̃, ꝑuꝛ̃ðeꝛ̃, Saxon, the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterwards in books.] At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely; beyond; moreover.

To make a perfect judgment of good pictures, when compared with one another, besides rules, there is farther required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

They contented themselves with the opinions, fashions, and things of their country, without looking any farther. Locke.

FA'RTHER. adj. [supposed from far, more probably from forth, and to be written further.]

1. More remote.

Let me add a farther truth, that without ties of gratitude, I have a particular inclination to honour you. Dryden

2. Longer; tending to greater distance.

Before our farther way the fates allow,
Here must we fix on high the golden bough. Dryden.

FA'RTHERANCE. n. s. [more properly furtherance from further.] Encouragement; promotion.

That was the foundation of the learning I have, and of all the furtherance that I have obtained. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

FA'RTHERMORE. adv. [more properly furthermore.] Besides; over and above; likewise.

Farthermore the leaves, body, and boughs of this tree, by so much exceed all other plants, as the greatest men of power and wordly ability surpass the meanest. Raleigh's History.

To FA'RTHER. v. a. [more proper To further.] To promote; to facilitate; to advance.

He had farthered or hindered the taking of the town. Dryden.

FA'RTHING. n. s. [ꝑeoꝛ̃ðling, Saxon, from ꝑeoꝛ̃ðe, four, that is, the fourth part of a penny.]

1. The fourth of a penny; the smallest English coin.

A farthing is the least denomination or fraction of money used in England Cocker's Arithmetick.

Like all those things we toil so hard in,
Would not avail one single farthing. Prior.

You are not obliged to take money not of gold or silver; not the halfpence or farthings of England. Swift.

2. Copper money.

The parish find, 'tis true; but our churchwardens feed on the fines, and give us the farthings. Gay.

3. It is used sometimes in a sense hyperbolical: as, it is not worth a farthing; or proverbial.

His son builds on, and never is content,
'Till the last farthing is in structure spent Dryden.

4. A kind of division of land. Not in use.

Thirty acres make a farthing-land, nine farthings a Cornish acre: and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. Carew.

FA'RTHINGALE. n. s. [This word has much exercised the etymology of Skinner, who at last seems to determine that it is derived from verta garde: if he had considered what vert signifies in Dutch, he might have found out the true sense.] A hoop; circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.

With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales and things.
Shakespeare.

Tell me,
What compass will you wear your farthingale?
Shakspeare.

Arthur wore in hall
Round table, like a farthingal. Hudibras.

Some will have it that it portends the downfal of the French king; and observe, that the farthingale appeared in England a little before the ruin of the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

She seem a medley of all ages,
With a huge farthingale to swell her sustian stuff,
A new commode, a topknot and a ruff. Swift.

FA'RTHINGSWORTH. n. s. [farthing and worth.] As much as is sold for a farthing.

They are thy customers; I hardly ever sell them a farthingsworth of any thing. Arbuthnot.

FA'SCES. n. s. [Latin.] Rods anciently carried before the consuls as a mark of their authority.

The duke beheld, like Scipio, with disdain,
That Carthage, which he ruin'd, rise once more;
And shook aloft the fasces of the main,
To fright those slaves with what they felt before.
Dryden.

FA'SCIA. n. f. [Latin.] A fillet; a bandage.

FA'SCIATED. adj. [from fascia.] Bound with fillets; tied with a bandage. Dict.

FASCIA'TION. n. f. [from fascia.] Bandage; the act or manner of binding diseased parts.

Three especial sorts of fasciation, or rowling, have the worthies of our profession commended to posterity. Wiseman

To FA'SCINATE. v. a. [fascino, Latin.] To bewitch; to enchant; to influence in some wicked and secret manner.

There be none of the affections which have been noted to fascinate or bewitch, but love and envy. Bacon.

Such a fascinating sin is this, as allows men no liberty of consideration. Decay of Piety.

FASCINA'TION. n. f. [from fascinate.] The power or act of bewitching; enchantment; unseen inexplicable influence.

He had such a crafty and bewitching fashion, both to move pity and to induce belief, as was like a kind of fascination and enchantment to those that saw him or heard him. Bacon.

The Turks hang old rags, or such like ugly things, upon their fairest horses, and other goodly creatures, to secure them against fascination. Waller.

There is a certain bewitchery or fascination in words, which make them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of. South

FA'SCINE. n. f. [French.] A faggot. Military cant.

The Black Prince passed many a river without the help of pontoons, and filled a ditch with faggots as successfully as the generals of our times do with fascines. Addison's Spectator.

FA'SCINOUS. adj. [fascinum, Lat.] Caused or acting by witchcraft, or enchantment. Not in use.

I shall not discuss the possibility of fascinous diseases, farther than refer to experiment. Harvey.

FA'SHION. n. f. [façon, French; facies, Latin.]

1. Form; make; state of any thing with regard to its outward appearance.

They pretend themselves grieved at our solemnities in erecting churches, at their form and fashion, at the stateliness of them and costliness, and at the opinion which we have of them. Hooker.

The fashion of his countenance was altered. Luke.

Stand these poor people's friend.

—I will,

Or let me loose the fashion of a man. Shakesp.

2. The make or cut of cloaths.

I'll be at charges for a looking-glass,
And entertain a score or two of taylors,
To study fashions to adorn my body. Shakesp.

You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments. Shakesp.

3. Manner; sort; way.

For that I love your daughter
In such a righteous fashion as I do,
Perforce against all checks, rebukes, and manners,
I must advance. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Pluck Casca by the sleeve,
And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

The commissioners either pulled down or defaced all images in churches; and that in such unseasonable and unseasoned fashion, as if it had been done in hostility against them. Hayward

4. Custom operating upon dress, or any domestick ornaments.

Here's the note
How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat,
The fineness of the gold, the chargeful fashion.
Shakespeare.

5. Custom; general practice.

Zelmane again, with great admiration, begun to speak of him; asking whether it were the fashion or no, in Arcadia, that shepherds should perform such valorous enterprizes? Sidney.

Though the truth of this hath been universally acknowledged, yet because the fashion of the age is to call every thing into question, it will be requisite to satisfy men's reason about it. Tillotson.

No wonder that pastorals are fallen into disesteem, together with that fashion of life upon which they were grounded. Walsh.

It was not easily reconciled to the common method; but then it was the fashion to do such things Arbuthnot.

6. Manner imitated from another; way established by precedent.

Sorrow so royally in you appears,
That I will deeply put the fashion on,
And wear it in my heart. Shakespeare.

7. General approbation; mode.

A young gentleman accommodates himself to the innocent diversions in fashion. Locke

His panegyricks were bestowed only on such persons as he had familiarly known, and only at such times as others cease to praise, when out of power, or out of fashion. Pope.

8. Rank; condition above the vulgar. It is used in a sense below that of quality.

It is strange that men of fashion, and gentlemen, should so grossly belie their own knowledge. Raleigh

The graves of the rebellious generations were already fashioned in the clouds, which soon after should swallow up all living creatures. Raleigh

The rib he form'd and fashion'd with his hands;
Under his forming hands a creature grew,
Man like, but different sex. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Inability will every one find in himself, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received by his senses from external objects, or by reflection from the operations of his mind about them. Locke.

How could this noble fabrick be design'd,
And fashion'd, by a maker brute and blind;
Could it of art such miracles invent?
And raise a beauteous world of such extent; Blackm.

A different toil another forge employs,
Here the loud hammer fashions temple toys:
Each trinket that adorns the modern dame,
First to these little artists ow'd its frame. Gay's Fan

2. To fit; to adapt; to accommodate.

Laws ought to be fashioned unto the manners and conditions of the people to whom they are meant, and not to be imposed upon them according to the simple rule of right. Spenser.

Ne do, I doubt, but that ye well can fashion
Yourselves thereto, according to occasion. Hubb. Tale.

Nature, as it grows again tow'rds earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Shak.

This cardinal,
Though from an humble stock undoubtedly,
Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle.
Shak. Hen. VIII.

3. To counterfeit. Not used.

It better fits my blood to be disdained of all, than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any. Shakesp

4. To make according to the rule prescribed by custom.

The value of the labour employed about one parcel of silver more than another, makes a difference in their price; and thus fashioned plate sells for more than its weight. Locke.

FA'SHIONABLE. adj. [from fashion.]

1. Approved by custom; established by custom; modish.

The eminence of your condition will invite gentlemen to the study of nature, and make philosophy fashionable. Glanville.

FEE. n. s. [feoh, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgement of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum; for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special, is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Cowel.

Now like a lawyer, when he lend would let,
Of all fee-simples in his master's name.
Hubberd's Tale.

Here' the Lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave
Shakesp. Henry VI.

2. Property; peculiar.

Galen speaketh of the curing of the scirrhus of the liver by milk of a cow, that feedeth upon certain herbs. Bacon.

Some birds feed upon the berries of this vegetable. Brown.

He feeds on fruits, which of their own accord,
The willing ground and laden tree afford. Dryden.

The Brachmans were all of the same race, lived in fields and woods, and fed only upon rice, millet, or herbs.

All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
Th' extensive blessing of his luxury. Pope.

3. To pasture; to place cattle to feed.
If a man shall cause his field to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field, he shall make restitution. Exodus.

4. To grow fat or plump. A provincial use.

FEED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Food; that which is eaten.
A fearful deer then looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a flaring kind of tremor through all his principal parts. Sandys.
An ox and a fed ox will be a young ox's feed sooner than a lean one, because they eat no cost. Mortimer's Husb.

2. Pasture.
Before his coat, his flesh and horrid of feed
Are now to take. Shak. Coriolanus.

3. Meal, act of eating.
Pleasant sound
To capture fowl by, to pluck and eat new fill
I guess not, for such delicacies fill their haunt
At feed or fountain never had I found. Milton.

FEEDER n. s. [from feed.]

1. One that gives food.
He hath observed his keeper, and looks up,
Not to his master's, but his feeder's hand.
Denham.

2. An exciter; an encourager.
When thou do'st hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots. Shakesp.

3. One that eats.
With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder.
Shakesp.
But that our feasts
In every mess have folly, and the feeders
Jest with it as a custom, I should think
To see you so attired. Shakespeare.
We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush, called the mistel thrush, or feeder upon mistelto
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

4. One that eats in a certain mode; as, a nice feeder, a great feeder.
But let these feeders be no guests for me,
Rust as they eat with quality.
Those, that unfashionable men am I,
With me they'd starve for want of variety. Dryden.

To FEEL. pret. felt; part. pass. felt. [felan, Saxon.]

1. To have perception of things by the touch.
The sense of feeling can give us a notion of extension, figure, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours. Addison's Spect.

2. To search by feeling. See FEELER.
They should seek the Lord, if happily they may feel after him, and find him. Acts.

3. To have a quick sensibility of good or evil, right or wrong.
Man, who feels for all mankind. Pope.

4. To appear to the touch.
Blind men say black feels rough, and white feels soft. Dryden.

4. To have sense of external pain or pleasure.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel
Milton.
But why should those be thought to escape, who feel
Those rods [illegible] and those whips of steel?
Creech.

5. To be affected by; to perceive mentally.
Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!
Shakespeare Henry VIII.
The well-sung woes shall sooth my pensive ghost;
He best can paint them who can feel them most.
Pope.
Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
Ever felt such grief, such terrour, and despair.
Pope.

6. To know; to be acquainted with.
He overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little.
Shakespeare Henry VIII.

FEELING. n. s. [from the verb.] The sense of feeling, the touch.
The distinction of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel. Sharp's Surgery.

FEELER. n. s. [from feel.]

1. One that feels.
This hand, whose touch,
Whose every touch would force the feeler's soul
To th' oath of loyalty. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. The horns or antennæ of insects.
Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennæ; and as these are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eye, the use here named may be admitted.
Derham's Physico-Theology.

FEELING. participial adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.
O wretched state of man in retardation!
O well thou hit'st a feeling declaration
Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep mission!
Sidney.
Thy warning words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion
Sidney.
Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Mount it again; and frame some feeling line
That may discover such integrity Shakesp.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.
A timid poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity Shakespeare.
I had a feeling sense
Of all your kindness to ours; but this last
Strikes through my heart. Southerne.

FEELING. n. s. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.
Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd;
So brittle and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That we might look at will through every pore?
Milton.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.
The apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

3. Perception, sensibility.
Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects. Bacon.
Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy, for if they trust by their own feeling, they cannot find it. Bacon.
As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FEELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.
The prince might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly. Sidney.
He would not have talked so feelingly of Cedrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it.
Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.
Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The seasons' difference; as the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shakesp.
He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh.

FEET. n. s. The plural of foot.
His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears. Pope.

FEETLESS. adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.
Geoffrey of Boulloin broched three footless birds, called Allerions, upon his arrow. Camden.

To FEIGN v. a. [feindre, French; fingo, Latin.]

1. To invent; to image by an act of the mind.
Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd,
Gorgons, and hydras, and chimæras dire! Milton.
No such things are done as thou fayest, but thou feignest them out of thine own heart.
Neh. vi. 8.

By Roderigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd. Shakesp.

I have great comfort from this fellow; methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows Shakespeare's Tempest.

Occasion that did help me to the crown,
Had I not kept loyal to Richard;
And left me in reproachful banishment,
A fellow of no mark or likelihood. Shakesp.

How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds,
Make deeds ill done! Had'st thou not been by,
A fellow with the hand of tame murder'd,
Quoth I, not heard the voice of shame,
The wonder-lead not on unto my mind. Shakesp.

The Moon's abus'd by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow! Shakespeare.

The fellow had taken more fish than he could speed with [illegible] sweet Dryden.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would impart a foreign name
Upon our fleet, and the Scythian line
By fraud and theft are less than men bred. Dryden.

You will understand, sir, I am not your fellow, as this Mr. Wood, could have got his Majesty's broad [illegible] Swift.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. s. One that has the same master.

Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servants, and inquire
Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milton.

Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my plighted care
Than the bright dames we serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is their relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Atterbury.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. s. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation. Shakesp.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Phil. ii 25.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. s. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

This boy cannot tell what he would have
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship. Shakspeare

From blissful bow'r:
Of amarantine shade, fountain, or spring,
By th' waters of life, where'er they sat
In fellowships of joy, the sons of light
Hasted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy's Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination, and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cementer of society. Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.

We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shakesp.

Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves. Hooker.

Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knolles.

3. Equality.

4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lighten's aught each man's peculiar load.
Paradise Regained.

O love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And will not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hush, a sail! Shakesp.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon.

8. An establishment in the college, with share in its revenue.

Comfode, having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetick.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker.

FE'LLY. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tyger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast doth fellly him oppress. Spenser.

FELO-DE-SE. n. s. [In law.] He that committeth felony by murdering himself.

FE'LON. n. s. [felon, French; felo, low Latin; pel, Saxon.]

1. One who has committed a capital crime.

I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shakesp.

Th' wily fox,
Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the guard from dread.
Dryden.

2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wiseman's Surgery.

FE'LON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.

Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stirred up so mischievous despight! Spenser.

Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope.

FELO'NIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villainous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.

This man conceived the duke's death; [illegible] at was the motive of that felonious conception [illegible] in the clouds. Wotton.

O thievish night!
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies. Dryden.

FELO'NIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.

FELO'NIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked. Not used.

I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonious force of mine enemy. Spenser.

FE'MALE. n. s. [femelle, French; femella, Latin.] A she; one of the sex which brings young; not male.

God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Gen. i 2.

If he offer of the herd, whether it be male or female, he shall offer it without blemish. Lev.

Men, more divine,
Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are matters to their females, and their lords.
Shakesp.

FE'MALE. adj.

1. Not male.

Less of joy it seems. Milton.

So armine next appear'd
The female bee, that feeds her husband drone
Milton.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

Other suns, perhaps,
With their attendant moons thou wilt descry,
Communicating male and female light;
Which two great sexes animate the world. Milton.

Add what wants
In female sex, the more to draw his love. Milton.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charm. Milton.

If by a female hand he had not been
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen.
Dryden.

3. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in e weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

Th' ex-

Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable.
Cowley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems.
Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.

FEME Covert. n. s. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron. Blount.

FEME Sole. n. s. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.

Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fearful and talk'd of more than seen. Shak.
The furnace of black fen earth. Woodward.
He to Potina's watry marshes went;
A long canal the muddy fen divides,
And with a clear unsully'd current glides. Addison

FE'NBERRY. n. s. [fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry. Skinner.

FENCE. n. s. [from defence.]

1. Guard; security, outwork; defence.
That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors Decay of Piety.
There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange.
To put them out of their parents view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.
Let us bear this awful corps to Cæsar,
And lay it in his sight, that it may stand
A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison.

2. Inclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.
In vain did nature's wise command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;
Th' eternal fences overleap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.
Shall I mention make
Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?
Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,
Roars round the structure, and invades the fence?
Dryden.
Employ their wiles and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.
I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence. Shakesp.

4. Skill in defence.
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despight his nice fence and his active practice.
Shakespeare.

To FENCE. v. a.

1. To inclose; to secure by an inclosure or hedge.
Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain
Destroyed have, each field to waste is lade;
In fenced towers bestowed is their grain,

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and set darkness in my paths. Job, xix. 8.
Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews. Job. x. 11.
He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac. xii. 13.
See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail or other inclosure. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. To guard; to fortify.
So much of adders wisdom I have learnt,
To fence my ear against thy sorceries. Milton.
With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent.
Dryden.

To FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.
He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against, to act on the defensive.
Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.
In a throttle sing, he falls straight a capering:
He will fence with his own shadow. Shakesp.
A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred;
The stooping warriors aiming head to head,
Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound
The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;
Now fence and push, and pushing, loudly roar,
Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore
Dryden.
A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies at a gamesters company. Locke.
Their brag polemick wits, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplaying.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

FE'NCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.
Such motion of the heart rise to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms to a rage
As terrible a state, and as destructive:
So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,
And heaves the billow, of the boiling deep,
Alike from North, from South. Rowe's Jane Shore.

FE'NCER. n. s. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.
Calmness is great advantage; he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert
A minute fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

FE'NCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. Addison.

FE'NCING-MASTER. n. s. [fence and master.] One who teaches the science of defence, or the use of weapons.

FE'NCING-SCHOOL. n. s. [fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.
If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing school, and every day exercising. Locke.

FEN-CRICKET. n. s. [grillotalpa.] An insect that digs itself holes in the ground.

To FEND. v. a. [from defend.] To keep off; to shut out.
Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath to fend the bitter cold. Dryden.

To FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.
The dexterous management of terms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

FE'NDER. n. s. [from fend.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.

2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

FENERA'TION. n. s. [fœneratio, Latin.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.
The hare figured not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superfetation. Brown.

FE'NUGREEK. n. s. [fœnum Græcum, Lat.] A plant.

FE'NNEL. n. s. [fœniculum, Latin.] A plant of strong scent.
A savory odour blown, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n.
Milton.

FE'NNELFLOWER. n. s. [nigella.] A plant.

FE'NNELGIANT. n. s. [ferula.] A plant.

FEW. adj. [peo, peopa, Saxon; fua, Danish.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but few of many. Jer.
So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good;
For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward? Dryden.
On Winter seas we fewer storms behold,
Than foul diseases that infect the fold. Dryden.
Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety. Locke.
The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope.
Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.
The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age have come up to that character.
Berkley to Pope

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.

To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this.
Hooker.
So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done?
Milton.
Thus Jupiter in few unfold's the charge. Dryden.
The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope.

FEWEL. n. f. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions, and broils? Hooker, Dedication.
Others may give the fewel or the fire!
But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire.
Denham.
A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley, Serm.

To FE'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.

Never, alas! the dreadful name,
That fewels the infernal flame. Cowley.

FIBRE n. f. [fibre, Fr. fibra, Latin.]

1. A small thread or string, the first constituent parts of bodies.

Now sinking streams the thirsty plant renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

2. A fibre in physick, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastick; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongious and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries, and muscles. Quincy.
My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life:
The name of father awes me still. Dryden.

FI'BRIL. n. f. [fibrille, French.] A small fibre or string.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells.
Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

FI'BROUS. adj. [fibreux, French; from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies vicious is plain, for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture. Bacon.
How Perseus' arms employ'd around
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryd.
The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbuthnot on Alim.

FIBULA. n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milton.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought.
Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answ'ring spoke.
Milton.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Springs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise.
Prior.

FILIA'TION. n. s. [from filius, Latin.] The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FI'LINGS. n. s. [without a singular; from file.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose. Brown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton on the Classf.

To FILL. v. n. [fyllan, Saxon.]

1. To store 'till no more can be admitted.

Fill the waterpots with water, and they filled them up to the brim. John, ii. 7.

I am who fill
Infinitude, nor vacuous space. Milton.

The celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
Birth-day of Heav'n and Earth; with joy and shout
The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Milton.

2. To store abundantly.

Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill.
Milton.

3. To satisfy; to content.

He with his consorted Eve
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse to hear. Milton.

Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and superabundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings. Cheyne.

4. To glut; to surfeit.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.
Shakesp.

5. To FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness sits so loose about,
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. To FILL up. To supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the underwork of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. To FILL up. To occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To FILL up. To engage; to employ.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakespear's Macbeth.

To FILL. v. n.

1. To give to drink.

In the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double.
Rev. xviii.

And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss.
Shakesp.

2. To grow full.

3. To glut; to satiate.

Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily. Bacon.

4. To FILL up. To grow full.

Neither the Palus Meotis nor the Euxine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shallower. Woodward.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp.

FILL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That ayre thereof her babes may suck their fill.
Fairy Queen.

But thus inflam'd he spoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war.
Fairfax.

When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock, and waters flowed out to your fill? 2 Esd. i. 20.

Mean while enjoy
Your fill, what happiness this happy state
Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milton.

Amid' the tree now got, where plenty hung
Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill,
I spar'd not. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Which made me gently first remove your fears,
That so you might have room to entertain
Your fill of joy. Denham's Sophy.

Your barbarity may have its fill of destruction.
Pope.

2. [More properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.

This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber. Mortimer's Husb.

FILLER. n. s. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.

'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryd. Æn. Dedic.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FI'LLET. n. s. [filet, French; filum, Lat.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breadth inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs.
Dryden's Æn.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:
These morsels stay'd their stomach; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryden.

3. Meat rolled together and tied round.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakesp.

The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species, Swift.

4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel. Harris.

Pillars and their fillets of silver. Exodus.

To FI'LLET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.

2. To adorn with an astragal.

He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapiters, and filletted them. Ex. xxxviii. 28.

To

To FI'LIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shak.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun. Shakes.

We see, that if you fillip a lutestring, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon's Natural History.

FI'LLIP. n. s. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

FI'LLY. n. s. [filoy, Welsh; fille, French.]

1. A young horse or mare. Not now used.

Geld fillies, but tits, yet a nine days of age,
They die else of gelding, and gelders do rage:
Young fillies so likely of bulk and of bone,
Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone. Tusser.

A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

2. A young mare; opposed to a colt or young horse.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakespeare.

I am joined in wedlock, for my sins, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet. Addison's Spectator.

FILM. n. s. [ꝑylmle]a, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
Had bred. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it. Graunt.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phænomena of sight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope.

To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FI'LMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie,
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions off, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
When light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

To FI'LTER. v. a. [filtro, low Latin; per filum trahere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquour by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.

Dilute this liquour with fair water, filtre it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew's Museum.

FI'LTER. n. s. [filtrum, Latin.]

1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel so that the liquour drips from it.

2. A strainer; a search.

That the water passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.

FI'LTH. n. s. [ꝑilꝺ, Saxon.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filths savour but themselves. Shakesp. King Lear.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Natural History.

How perfect then is man? from head to foot
Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.

Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ence,
To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

FI'LTHILY. adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.

It stuck filthily in camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

FI'LTHINESS. n. s. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Spenser.

They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South's Sermons.

FI'LTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shak. Macbeth.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epick poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To FI'LTRATE. v. a. [from filter.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.

The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FILTRA'TION. n. s. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquour through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FI'MBLE Hemp. n. s. [Corrupted from female.]

The light Summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Mortimer.

Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, and serve at a need,
The fimble to spin, and the carle for her seed. Tusser.

FIN. n. s. [ꝑin, Saxon; vin, Dutch.] The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakesp. Othello.

Their fins consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. Moxe.

Thus at half-ebb a rolling sea,
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
Rest on their fins awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryden.

Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. Addison's Ovid.

FIN-FOOTED. adj. [fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like fissipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latirostrous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown.

FI'NABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that which deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.

FI'NAL. adj. [final, French; finalis, Lat.]

At last resolv'd to work his final smart,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start.
Spenser's Fairy Queen.

4. Respecting the end or motive.

Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; as that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them. Hooker.

By its gravity air raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuity. Ray.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier.

FI'NALLY. adv. [from final.]

1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

Sight bereav'd
May chance to number thee with those Whom patience finally must crown. Milt. Agonistes.

2. Completely; without recovery.

Not any house of noble English in Ireland was utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only. Davies.

Doubtlessly many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's sins to answer for but their own. South.

FINANCE. n. s. [French.] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.

This sort of finance hath been increased. Bacon.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the escheats or forfeitures. Bacon.

His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their pyracies, though he practised the same trade when he was straitened in his finances at the siege of Byzantium. Arbuthnot.

FINANCER. n. s. [French.] One who collects or farms the publick revenue; one

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together Abbot.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead men's graves. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

It keeps those slender varied bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would flag or curl.
Boyle's Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,
The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
Forsake by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
As if she were a body in a body:
My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

His stomach will want victuals at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally flags and languishes. Addison's Spectator.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
My love above the starry vault I raise,
Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust. Arbuthnot.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.

To FLAG. v. a.

1. To let fall into feebleness; to suffer to droop.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
As well as Cupid, Time is blind:
Soon must those glories of thy face
The fate of vulgar beauty find:
The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die,
Prior.

2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor were all flagged with excellent marble. Sandys.

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward.

Can flags there flourish where no waters flow? Sandys.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones. Walton's Angler.

Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds,
Mortimer's Husb.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land-forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement. Shakesp.

He hangs out as many flags as he espieth vessels; square, if ships; pennifers, pendants. Sandys.

Democracies are fitter subject to faction than where there are kings or nobles: for if men's eyes are upon the persons, it is for the business' sake as fittest, and not for flags of pedigree. Bacon.

Let him be sure
With all the grisly legion that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron,
Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms
'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out;
And force him to restore his purchase back,
Or drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton.

The Branch and Spaniards, when your flags appear,
Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag, is a ground at pleasure for opening a war. Temple.

In either's flag the golden serpents bear,
Erecting crests alike, like plumes rear,
And mingle friendly hissings in the air. Dryden.

Then they, whose mothers, frantick with their fear,
In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,
And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair. Dryden.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements, [flache, old French.]

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Fossils.

By Bridewell all descend,
As morning pray'r and flagellation end. Garth.

FLA'GGINESS. n. s. [from flaggy.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension.

FLA'GGY. adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,
Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way. Fairy Q.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry. Dryd.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple. Bacon.

FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitium, Lat.]

1. Wicked; villainous; atrocious.

No villainy or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found, that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

There is no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. L'Estrange.

First, those flagitious times.
Pregnant with unknown crimes,
Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Rosscommon.

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a death in these flagitious times. Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, and earliest of each church and state,
And, hardest hill, flagitious yet not great. Pope.

FLAGITIOUSNESS. n. s. [from flagitious.] Wickedness; villainy.

In all her functions weary of herself. Milton.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.

How weary, stale, flat and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!
To one firmly persuaded of the vanity of sublunary happiness, and earnestly desirous of attaining to heavenly satisfactions must needs look little, and flat and unsavoury. Attterbury.

11. Peremptory; absolute; downright.

His horse with flat tiring taught him, that street stays make speedy journeys.
It is a flat wrong to publish the thoughts of any before it be attached; for that justice pretends nothing but the evil act or wicked mind.
As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousness.
You fart away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes:
Those prisoners you shall keep:
——I will, that's flat.
Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us.
If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory:
Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness;
But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story.
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his mere clod of earth, the spacious sky.
You had broke and robb'd his smock,
And stole his talismanique louse;
And all his new-found old inventions,
With flat felonious intentions.

12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.

O'erbears your officers. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

All the infections, that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shakesp.

Half my pow'rs this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln washes have devoured them. Shakesp.

4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shak.

The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh's Essays.

Having newly left those grammatick flats and shallows, where they stuck unseasonably, they are now turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton.

Full in the entrance's passage hulls of sand,
And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen, with dissembled depths betray. Dryden.

Must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

5. The broad side of a blade.

A darted mandate came
From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
Bid me to fore, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the dangers of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind. Dryd.

6. Depression of thought or language.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, which 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.

7. A surface without relief, or prominences.

Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull universal flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills? Bentley.

4. To raise false hopes.

He, always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flatt'ring gales
Unmindful. Milton.

FLAT'TERER. n. s. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falsities.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered. Shak.

Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perforce. Bacon.

If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatt'rer from the friend.
Dryden.

After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants. Addison's Guardian.

The publick should know this: yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer. Swift.

FLAT'TERY. n. s. [from flatter; flatterie, French.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness,
And hold it mean to borrow aught from flattery.
Rowe.

Simple pride for flatt'ry makes demands. Pope.

See how they beg an alms of flattery!
They languish, if support them with a lye. Young.

FLAT'TISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

These are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape. Woodward on Fossils.

FLAT'ULENCY. n. s. [from flatulent.]

1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turgescence by wind confined.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency. Arbuthnot.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions. Glanville.

FLAT'ULENT. adj. [flatulentus, flatus, Lat.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbuthnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again. Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our gross faculties, is a flatulent vanity. Glanville's Scepsis.

How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works! Dryden.

FLATUOSITY.

FLATU'OSITY. n. s. [flatuosité, French; from flatus, Latin.] Windiness; fulness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit of wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly. Bacon.

FLA'TUOUS. adj. [from flatus, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so sendeth it to the mesentery veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down wind. Bacon.

FLA'TUS. n. s. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore discussed by warm aromaticks. Quincy.

FLA'TWISE, adj. [flat and wise: so it should be written, not flatways.] With the flat downwards; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the site of the stratum in which it was reposited. Woodward on Fossils.

To FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering shew in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to immolate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,
For useless ornament and flaunting show:
We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,
And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine. Dryden.

You sot, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-guilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family. Arbuthnot.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper: the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places.

Fortune in men has some small difference made;
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade. Pope.

FLAUNT. n. s. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble,
Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how
Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold
The sternness of his presence! Shakesp.

FLA'VOUR. n. s.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early. Addison's Spect.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,
With bending heaps, so nigh their bloom disclose,
Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows. Dryden.

FLA'VOROUS. adj. [from flavour.

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'rate there, and fruits declin'd
From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. s. [φλαω to break; flaw, Saxon, a garment.]

1. A crank or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws
Or ere I weep. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Wool, new-shorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw and had not the bunghole open. Bacon's Natural History.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw. Boyle.

A flaw is in thy helmet's visor found:
'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound. Dryden.

As if great Aetna, from his height,
Should fall beneath his heavenly weight,
And with a mighty flaw the burning mass, to ease itself,
Should give it vent, and nothing down, Enceladus this aether hail. Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail China jar receive a flaw. Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin. Swift.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scriveners and brokers do value unsound men to serve their own turn. Bacon's Essays.

Traditions were a proof alone,
Could we be certain such they were, so known:
But since some flaws in long descents may be,
They make not truth, but probability. Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,
To null her jointure with a flaw. Hudibras.

Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires. Addison's Spectator.

So many flaws had this vow in its first conception. Atterbury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flo, Latin.] Obsolete.

Being incens'd, he's flint;
As humourous as Winter, and as sudden
As flaws congealed the spring of day. Shak. Hen. IV.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall, t'expel the Winter's flaw.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

As a huge fish, laid
Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw frald,
Shoots back; so, sent against the ground,
Was foil'd Eurialus. Chapman's Iliad.

Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,
Boreas, and Caecias, and Argestes loud,
And Thrascias rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but myself
Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,
Are to the main inconsiderable. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw. Shakesp.

The sort's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town
Came pouring in, I heard the mighty flaw;
When first it broke, the crowding ensigns saw
Which choak'd the passage. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would become
A woman's story at a Winter's fire. Shake. Macbeth.

To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,
Alack, too weak the conflict to support,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup. Boyle.

The brazen cauldrons with the fonts are flaw'd,
The garment stuff with joe, as hearths is thaw'd. Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchant's goods. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

FLA'WLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless Heaven only knows enough to make itself conspicuous. Boyle.

FLAWN. n. s. [flaon, Saxon; flan French; vlaye, Dutch.] A sort of custard; a pie baked in a dish.

Till oven full of flawns, Ginny pass not for fleece,

To FLICKER. v. a. [flicheren, Dutch; flacciare, Italian; to play the wings.] To have a fluttering motion.
The quivering of radiant fire,
On flickering Phœbus' front. Shakesp. Love's Lab. Lost.
Dusk shining darkness, pitchy mist of night,
And Phœbus in the confines of the light,
Paints the sun, one day began to spring;
The funeral lark already broach'd her wings,
And flick'ring on her nest made short essays to sing. Dryden.
As all her stretch her neck, wings she spread,
And with her feathers fan'd the dead;
Then flick'ring to his pallid lips she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.

FLI'ER. n. s. [from fly.]
1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.
The gates are ope, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Now the fliers from, and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.
2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest; as in a jack.
The flier, tho't had leaden feet,
Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see't. Swift.

FLIGHT. n. s. [from To fly.]
1. The act of flying or running from danger.
And now, too late, he wishes for the fight,
That strength he wasted in ignoble flight. Denham.
He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run. Dryd.
As eager of the chace, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and lov'd, and burning with desire,
2. The act of using wings; volation.
For he so swift, so nimble was of flight,
That from his lowest tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser.
The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latian palace took her flight. Dryd. Æn.
Winds that tempests brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spite.
Dryden.
3. Removed from place to place by means of wings.
Ere the bat hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shakesp. Macbeth
The fowls shall take their flight away together.

Fowls, by winter forc'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands. Dryden.
4. A flock of birds flying together.
Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shakesp.
They take great pride in the feathers of birds, and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited into it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon.
I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my cup t' attend. Milton.
5. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.
6. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.
At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full threescore Scots they slew. Chevy Chase.
Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Swift.
7. The space past by flying.
8. Heat of imagination; sally of the soul.
Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,
When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.
He shewed all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was because he attempted every thing. Pope.
Strange visions fill, and stranger flights the bard:
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.
Tears, such as dear good-humour can prevail,
When age itself relents, and dreams and fooling fail.
Pope.
9. Excursion of the mind.
It rises from the earth to heaven, where the flights of imagination are so great, one might imagine that the genius of Homer were present to observe its present greatness. Temple.
Far is he above the vulgar height of impiety, but the highest flights of folly to atheism are things
Tillotson.
10. The power of flying.
In my school-days, when I had got one shaft, I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way. Shakespeare.

FLI'GHTLY. adj. [from flight.]

Pope.
3. A ſtream of diction; volubility of tongue.
Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the ſhedding of an hour-glaſs, but an effectual procuring that a man know ſomething which he knew not before, or to know it better. Scrib.

FLOWER. n. ſ. [fleur, French; flos, floris, Latin.]
1. The part of a plant which contains the ſeeds.
Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have a petals, a ſtamen, apex and ſtylus; and whatever flower wants either of theſe is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into ſimple ones, which are not compoſed of other ſmaller, and which uſually have but one ſingle ſtile, and compounded, which conſiſt of many flofculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flowers all of one entire leaf, though ſometimes cut or divided a little way into many ſeeming petals, or leaves; as in borage, bugloſs, or polypetalous, which have diſtinct petals, and thoſe falling off ſingly, and not altogether, as the ſeeming petals of monopetalous flowers always do: but theſe are farther divided into uniform and diſform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the diſform have no ſuch regularity, as in the flowers of lupe and deadnettle. A monopetalous diſform flower is likewiſe further divided into, firſt, ſemi-bifular, whoſe upper part reſembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the ariſtolochia; 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and ſcordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is ſometimes turned upwards, and ſo turn the convex part downwards, as in the chamæciſſus; but moſt commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and repreſents a kind of helmet, or monkſhood, and from thence theſe are frequently called galeate, cuculiate, and galericulate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the labrum, and moſt verticillate plants. Sometimes the labium is intire, and ſometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Conniculate; that is, ſuch hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of ſpur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinum, &c. and the cuniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the top or point. Compounded flowers are, firſt, diſcous, or diſcoidal; that is, whoſe floſculi are ſet ſo cloſe, thick, and even, as to make the ſurface of the flower plain and flat, which, becauſe of its round form, will be like a diſcus; which diſk is ſometimes radiated, when there is a row of petals ſtanding round in the diſk, like the points of a ſtar, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and ſometimes naked, having no ſuch radiating leaves round the limb of its diſk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolia, which is compoſed of plain flowers, ſet together in circular rows round the centre, and whoſe face is uſually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia. 3d, Fiſtular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into five jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, becauſe they want the petala, are called ſtaminous, apetalous, and capilliceous, and thoſe which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail. The term campaniformis is uſed for ſuch as are in the ſhape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for ſuch as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.
Good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they ſicken Shakſpeare's Macbeth
With flow'rs interwoven treſſes torn,
The nymphs in twilight ſhade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton
Beauteous flow'rs why do we ſpread
Upon the monuments of the dead. Cowley.
Though the ſame ſun with all diffuſive rays,
Bluſh in the roſe, and in the diamond blaze,
We praiſe the ſtronger effort of his power,
And always let the gem above the flower. Pope.
If the bloſſom of the plant be of moſt importance, we call it a flower; ſuch are daiſies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.
2. An ornament; an embelliſhment.

FLO'WERET. n. ſ. [fleuret, French.] A flower; a ſmall flower.
Sometimes her head ſhe fondly would aſſaile
With wanton garlands, or freſh flow'rets dight,
About her neck, or rings of raſhes plight. F. Q.
That ſame dew, which ſometime on the buds
Was wont to ſwell, like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,
Like tears that did their own diſgrace bewail
Shakeſpeare.
So to the ſylvan lodge
They came, that like Pomona's arbour ſmil'd,
With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant ſmells Milt
Then laughs the childiſh year with flow'rets crown'd,
And laviſhly perfumes the fields around;
But no ſubſtantial nouriſhment receives,
Infirm the ſtalks, unfold are the leaves. Dyer.

FLO'WERGARDEN, n. ſ. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.
Obſerving that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try thoſe ſhells in my flower garden, and I never ſaw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

Or seem they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milton.
If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton.

FLU'ID. n. s.
1. Any thing not solid.
2. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.
Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbuthnot.

FLUI'DITY. n. s. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.
Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton.
A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity. Arbuthnot.

FLU'IDNESS. n. s. [from fluid.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.
What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLU'MMERY. n. s. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflower or oatmeal.
Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Locke.

FOR. conj.

1. The word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,
Who for another year, dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet to old,
But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold. Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit:
For the first matter loves variety less. Cowley.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God. Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that. It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.

Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. Shakesp. Othello.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me. Shakespeare's Othello.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd, so fire augmenteth flame. Fairfax.

Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon's Natural History.

3. FOR as much. In regard to that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest overquick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water. Arbuth.

4. FOR why. Because; for this reason that.

Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him. Knolles.

To FORAGE. v. n. [from foris, abroad, Lat.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance. Not in use.

Forage, and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh. Shak.

2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night,
Wolves urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey. Denham.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn, and the dam went abroad to forage for them. L'Estr.

Nor dare they stray
When rain is promis'd or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their wat'ring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make. Dryden.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.

His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp
Forage in blood of French nobility. Shakesp.

To FORAGE. v. n. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.

FO'RCIBLE. adj. [from force.]

1. Strong; mighty: oppoſed to weak.
That puniſhment, which hath been ſometimes forcible to bridle ſin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.
Who therefore can invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies? Milton.

2. Violent; impetuous.
Jerſey, below'd by all; for all muſt feel
The influence of a form and mind,
Where comely grace and conſtant virtue dwell,
Like ming'd ſtreams, more forcible when join'd.
Jerſey ſhall at thy altars ſtand,
Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

3. Efficacious; active; powerful.
Sweet ſmells are moſt forcible in dry ſubſtances, when broken; and ſo likewiſe in oranges, the ſcraping of the rind giveth out their ſmell more.
Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

4. Prevalent; of great influence.
How forcible are right words? Job.
God hath aſſured us, that there is no inclination or temptation ſo forcible which our humble prayers and deſires may not fruſtrate and break aſunder.
Raleigh's Hiſtory.

5. Done by force; ſuffered by force.
He ſwifter far,
Me overtook, his mother all diſmay'd,

To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove.
Dryden's Æn.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease; if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state.
Dryden.

Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
By course of time to their appointed end. Dryden.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FORE-E'ND. n. s. [fore and end.] The anteriour part.

I have liv'd at hopest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm. Bacon.

FOREFA'THER. n. s. [fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge. Hooker.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh's History.

Conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief; mine is not so. Shakesp.

Shall I not be distraught,
And madly play with my forefather's joints? Shakesp.

Our great forefathers
Had left him nought to conquer but his country.
Addison.

When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison on Italy.

Blest Peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace
Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope.

To FOREFE'ND. v. a. [It is doubtful whether from fore or for and defend. If from fore, it implies antecedent provision, as forearm: if from for prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following examples one favours for, and the other fore.]

1. To prohibit; to avert.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heav'ns forefend! I would not kill thy soul.
Shakesp.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefend,
May bring your youth to some untimely end. Dryd.

2. To provide for; to secure.

Down with the nose,
Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away
Of him, that, his particular to forefend,
Smells from the gen'ral weal Shakesp.

To FOREGO'. v. a. [fore and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?
If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither forgiven nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard assay foregone;
And now hath vowed, till he avenged be
Of that despite, never to weaten none. Fairy Qu.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master. Shakesp.

Let us not forego
That for a trifle which was bought with blood.
Shakespeare.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd
To live again in these wild woods forlorn! Milton.

This argument might prevail with you to forego a little of your repose for the publick benefit. Dryd.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it for which they should forego a present enjoyment. Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. Shakesp.

It is a tradition understood of Cain, that many years foregone at what time his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch. Raleigh.

Reflect upon the two foregoing objections. Boyle.

This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitators please. Dryden's Dufresny.

I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations. Addison.

In the foregoing part of this work I promised people. Woodward.

3. To lose.

This is the very ecstasy of love,
Whose violent property foregoes itself,
And leaves the will to desperate undertakings. Shak.

FORE'GOER. n. s. [from forego.] Ancestor; progenitor.

Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our foregoers. Shakesp.

FOR'EGROUND. n. s. [fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can subsist on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed to be in an open field. Dryden.

FO'REHAND, n. s. [fore and hand.]

1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.

2. The chief part. Not in use.

The great Achilles whom opinion crowns
The sinew and the forehand of our host. Shakesp.

He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forehanded: mark but the cleanness of his shapes too. Dryden.

FO'REHEAD. n. s. [fore and head.]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And moulded ev'ry feature from my face:
Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes.
Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity. The forehead is the part on which shame visibly operates.

A man of confidence presseth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply. Swift.

FOREHO'LDING. n. s. [fore and hold.] Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

You son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home. Shakesp.

The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts. Milton.

The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestick and foreign writers. Atterbury.

The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy. Addison's Freeh.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart. Addison.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addison.

This design is not foreign from some peoples thoughts. Swift.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,
That he ran mad and died. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mould in their ill-natur'd land
Induce. Phillips.

FO'RLIGNER. n. s. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So meer a stranger to my thoughts I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sophy.

To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong'd a friend, a kinsman, and a son.
Dryden's Æn.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch, but the lemon, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners. Addison.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.

FO'RLIGNESS. n. s. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right.

FOREKNO'WLEDGE. n. s. [fore and knowledge.] Prescience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, saveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world. Hooker.

I told him you was asleep; he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chuses to speak with you. Shakesp.

If I foreknew,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown.
Milton.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters. Pope.

FO'RELAND. n. s. [fore and land.] A promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skilful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft to steers, and shifts her sails.
Milton.

To FORELA'Y. v. a. [fore and lay.]

1. To lay wait for; to intrap by ambush.

A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller:
The man lies murder'd while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thirds the brake.
Dryden.

2. To contrive antecedently.

To FO'RELIFT. v. a. [fore and lift.] To raise aloft any interiour part.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast;

1. An harbinger; a meſſenger ſent before to give notice of the approach of thoſe that follow.

The ſix ſtrangers ſeek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a ſeventh, the prince of Morocco. Shakeſpeare.

A cock was ſacrificed as the forerunner of day and the ſun, thereby acknowledging the light of life to be derived from the divine bounty, the daughter of Providence. Stirling ſect.

My elder brothers, my forerunners came,
Rough draughts of nature, ill deſign'd and lame:
Blown off, like bloſſoms never made to bear;
'Till I came finiſh'd, her laſt labour'd care. Dryd.

2. A prognoſtick; a ſign foreſhowing any thing.

O Eve! ſome further change awaits us nigh,
Which heav'n, by theſe mute ſigns in nature, ſhews
Forerunners of his purpoſe. Milton's Paradiſe loſt.

Loſs of ſight is the miſery of life, and uſually the forerunner of death. South.

The keeping inſenſible perſpiration up in due meaſure is the cauſe as well as ſign of health, and the leaſt deviation from that due quantity, the certain forerunner of a diſeaſe. Arbuthnot.

Already Opera prepares the way,
The ſure forerunner of her gentle ſway. Pope.

To Foresa'y. v. a. [fore and ſay.] To predict; to prophecy; to foretell.

Let ordinance

The next, could of things preſent beſt adviſe;
The third, things paſt could keep in memory. Fairy Queen.

If there be any thing foreſeen that is not ritual, be armed for it by any hearty though a ſhort prayer, and an earneſt reſolution beforehand, and then watch when it comes. Taylor.

At his foreſeen approach, already quake
The Caſpian kingdoms and Meotian lake;
Their ſeers behold the tempeſt from afar,
And threat'ning oracles denounce the war. Dryd.

2. To provide for; with to. Out of uſe.

A king againſt a ſtorm muſt foreſee to a convenient ſtock of treaſure. Bacon.

To Foresha'me. v. a. [fore and ſhame.] To ſhame; to bring reproach upon.

Oh bill, foreſhaming
Thoſe ſuch baſe heirs, that let their fathers lie
Without a monument. Shakſpeare's Cymbeline.

To Fo'reshew. v. a. [See Foreshow.]

Fo'reship. n. ſ. [fore and ſhip.] The anterior part of the ſhip.

The ſhipmen would have caſt anchors out of the foreſhip. Acts, xxvii. 30.

To ForeshO'rten. v. a. [fore and ſhorten.] To ſhorten figures for the ſake of ſhewing thoſe behind.

The greateſt parts of the body ought to appear foremoſt; and he forbids the foreſhortenings, becauſe they make the proportions leſs. Dryden's Dufreſn.

To Fo'reshow. v. a. [fore and ſhow.]

1. To diſcover before it happens; to predict; to prognoſticate.

Chriſt had called him to be a witneſs of his death, and reſurrection from the dead, according to that which the prophets and Moſes had foreſhewed. Hooker.

Next, like Aurora, Spenſer roſe,
Whoſe purple bluſh the day foreſhows. Prior.

You chooſe to withdraw yourſelf from public buſineſs, when the face of heaven grows troubled, and the frequent ſhifting of the wind foreſhews a ſtorm. Dennis.

2. To repreſent before it comes.

What elſe is the law but the goſpel foreſhewed?
What other the goſpel than the law fulfilled? Hooker.

Fo'resight. n. ſ. [fore and ſight.]

1. Preſcience; prognoſtication; foreknowledge. The accent anciently on the laſt ſyllable.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here ſleep below, while thou to foreſight wak'ſt,
As once thou ſlept'ſt while ſhe to life was form'd. Milton.

2. Provident care of futurity.

He had a ſharp foreſight, and working wit,
That never idle was, ne once could reſt a whit Spenſer.

In matters of arms he was both ſkilful and of diſcourſe, and as well in foreſight as reſolution preſent and great. Hayward.

Difficulties and temptations will more eaſily be borne or avoided, if with prudent foreſight we arm ourſelves againſt them. Regers.

Foresi'ghtful. adj. [foreſight and full.] Preſcient; provident.

Death gave him no ſuch pangs as the foreſightful care he had of his fully ſucceſſor. Sidney.

To Foresi'gnify. v. a. [fore and ſignify.] To betoken beforehand, to forethow, to typify.

Diſcoveries of Chriſt already preſent, whoſe future coming the pſalmiſt did but foreſignify. Hooker.

Yet as being paſt times noxious, where they light
On man, beaſt, plant, waſteful and turbulent,
They oft foreſignify and threaten ill. Milton.

Fo'reskin. n. ſ. [fore and ſkin.] The prepuce.

Their own hand
An hundred of the foe ſhall ſlay,
And for a dow'r them hundred foreſkins pay,
Be Michol thy reward. Cowley's Davideis.

Fo'reskirt. n. ſ. [fore and ſkirt.] The pendulous or looſe part of the coat before.

A thouſand pounds a year for pure reſpect!
No other obligation?
That promiſes more thouſands: honour's train
Is longer than his foreſkirt. Shakeſpeare's H. VIII

To Forestack. v. a. [fore and ſtack.] To neglect by idleneſs.

It

It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion forestalled, that might have been the eternal good of the land Spenser's State of Ireland.

To FORESLO'W, v. a. [fore and slow.]

1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.

No stream, no wood, no mountain could foreslow
Their hasty pace Fairfax.

Now the illustrious nymph return'd again,
Brings every grace triumphant in her train.
The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,
Foreslow'd her passage to behold her form. Dryden.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were one Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness to preslowing, but wisdom in choosing his time, resolved with speed to assail them.
Bacon's Henry VII.

Our good purposes foreslowed are become our torments upon our death bed. Bishop Hall.

Come, how many wife's do you know
That rule their husbands as their nets aright,
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreslow,
Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests spite
Their boats are lost, while we may sit and moan
That few were such, and now these few are none.
P. Fletch.

To FORESLO'W. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This wise plot courage in their quaking breasts,
But with the spoil of life and victory;
Foreslow no longer, make we hence amain. Shak.

To FORESPE'AK. v. a. [fore and speak.]

1. To predict, to foretell, to foresay; to foreshow, to foretell.

Old Geffrey of Winchester, thoseth no ominous forespeaking to be in navies. Camden's Remains.

2. To forbid. [From fore and speak.]

Though for my service I have been in three wars,
And forty-five times more,
And lay'd it on me. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

FORESPE'NT. adj. [fore and spent.]

You find and his vanities forespent,
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shakesp.

3. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice. Shakespeare.

FORESPU'RRER. n. s. [fore and spur.] One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly Summer was at hand,
As this forespurrer comes before his lord. Shakesp.

FO'REST. n. s. [foret, French; foresta, Italian.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until
Great Birnham-wood to Dunsinane's high hill
Shall come against him.
—— That will never be:
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champaigns, but grazing, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon.

How the bird forest rais'd its shady head. Rofcom.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forests, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure. The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agistors, regarders, bailiffs, and beedles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pyepowders to a fair. Cowel.

To FORESTA'LL. v. a. [foprestallan, Sax.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once, but husband it,
And give men turns of speech; do not forestall
By vainness thine own and others wit,
Ay if thou mad'st thy will. Herbert.

What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid. Milt.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap forestall.
Fairy Queen.

What's in thy prayer, but this twofold force
To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But for my tears,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shakespeare.

If thou cover death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I will not forestall your judgment of the rest.
Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He bold spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place at erst,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee. Fairy Qu.

4. To deprive by something prior. with of. Not in use.

May
This night forestall him of the coming day. Shak.

FORESTA'LLER. n. s. [from forestall.] One that anticipates the market; one that purchases before others to raise the price.

Commodities good or bad, the workman must take at his master's rate, or sit still and starve; whilst, by this means, this new sort of ingrossers or forestallers having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

FORESTBO'RN. adj. [forest, and born.] Born in a wild.

This boy is forestborn,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of desperate studies. Shakesp. As you Like it.

1. To have antepast of; to have prescience of.

2. To taste before another.

Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first
Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste.
Milton.

FO'RETASTE. n. s. Anticipation of.

A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury. It is the foretaste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity. South.

To FORETE'LL. v. a. preter. and part. pass. foretold. [fore and tell.]

1. To predict; to prophesy.

What art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue? Shak.

I found
The new-created world, which fame in heaven
Long had foretold. Milton.

Mercia's king,
Warn'd in a dream, his murder did foretell,
From point to point, as after it befell. Dryden.

When great Ulysses fought the Phrygian shores,
Deeds then undone my faithful tongue foretold;
Heaven seal'd my words, and you those deeds behold.
Pope.

2. To foretoken; to foreshow.

To FORETE'LL. v. n. To utter prophecy.

All the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, have likewise foretold of these days
Acts, iii. 24.

FORETE'LLER. n. s. [from foretell.] Predicter; foreshewer.

Others are proposed, not that the foretold events should be known, but that the accomplishment that expounds them may evince, that the foreteller of them was able to foresee thee. Boyle on Colours.

To FORETHI'NK. v. a [fore and think.]

1. To anticipate in the mind; to have prescience of.

The soul of every man
Prophetically does forethink thy fall. Shakespeare.

I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom
Forethought by heaven. Shakespeare's King John.

Adam could not be ignorant of the punishments due to neglect and disobedience; and felt, by the proof thereof, in himself another terror than he had forethought, or could imagine. Raleigh.

Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,
Her soul forethought the fiend would change his game.
Dryd.

2. To contrive antecedently.

Blessed be that God which hath given you an heart to forethink this, and a will to honour him with his own. Bishop Hall.

To FORETHI'NK, v. n. To contrive beforehand.

What's my frenzy will be call'd my crime:
What then is thine? Thou cool deliberate villain!
Thou wise, forethinking, weighing politician!
Smith.

FORETHO'UGHT. n. s. [from forethink.]

1. Prescience.

1. Prescience; anticipation.
He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by spitefulness of forethought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil counsel. L'Estrange.
2. Provident care.

Foreto'oth. n. s. [fore and tooth.] The tooth in the anterior part of the mouth; the incisor.
The foreteeth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge like chizzles. Ray on the Creation.

Fo'retop. n. s. [fore and top.] That part of a woman's head-dress that is forward, or the top of a periwig.
So may your hats your foretops never press, Untouch'd your ribbons, sacred be your dress. Dryd.

Forevo'uched. part. [fore and vouch.] Affirmed before; formerly told.
Sure her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it; or your forevouch'd affection
Fall'n into taint. Shakesp. King Lear.

Fo'reward. n. s. [fore and ward.] The van; the front.
They that marched in the foreward were all mighty men. 1 Mac. ix. 11.

To Forewarn. v. a. [fore and warn.]
1. To admonish beforehand.
I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell. Luke, xii. 5.
2. To inform previously of any future event.
Divine interpreter, by favour sent
Down from the empyrean, to forewarn,
Us timely of what might else have been our loss
Unknown. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. To caution against any thing beforehand.
Well I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd. Shakesp. Henry VI.
Thy pride,
And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd
Not to be trusted. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Tho' Phœbus had forewarn'd him of singing wars, yet the touch of nature was free. Dryd. Virg. Ded.
Young Chorœbus, who by love was led
To win renown and fair Cassandra's bed,
Had lately brought his troops to Priam's aid;
Forewarn'd in vain by the prophetick maid. Dryd.

To Forewa'ste. v. a. [fore and waste.] To desolate; to destroy. Out of use.
Vespasian, with great spoil and rage,
Forewasted all, until Gemissa gent
Persuaded him to cease. Fairy Queen.

Forewo'rn. part. [fore and worn, from wear.] Worn out; wasted by time or use.
Neither the light was enough to read the words, and the ink was already foreworn, and in many places blotted. Sidney.

Fo'rfeit. n. s. [forfait, French; fforfed, Welsh.]
1. Something lost by the commission of a crime; something paid for expiation of a crime; a fine; a mulct.
Thy slanders I forgive, and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits. Shakesp.
Th' execution leave to high disposal,
And let another hand, not thine, exact
Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Milton's Agonistes.
Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,
Of which foul treason does a forfeit make. Waller.
2. A person obnoxious to punishment: one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.
Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words. Shakesp.
Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. Shakesp.

To Fo'rfeit. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some breach of condition; to lose by some offence.
If then a man, on light conditions, gain
A great estate to him, and his, for ever;
If wilfully he forfeit it again,
Who doth bemoan his heir, or blame the giver? Davies.
Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness. Boyle.
A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perhaps to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it. Locke.

Fo'rfeit. participial. adj. [from the verb.] Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.
All the souls that are, were forfeit once;
And he that might the 'vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.
Beg that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself;
And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shakespeare.
This now fenceless world,
Forfeit to death. Milton.
Straight all his hopes exhal'd in empty smoke,
And his long toils were forfeit to a look. Dryden.
Methought with wond'rous ease he swallow'd down
His forfeit honour, to betray the town. Dryden.
How the murd'rer payed his forfeit breath;
What lands so distant from that scene of death,
But trembling heard the fame! Pope's Odyssey.

Fo'rfeitable. adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

Fo'rfeiture. n. s. [forfaiture. French; from forfeit.]
1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.
2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.
The court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if Imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Bacon's War with Spain.
Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor.
He fairly abdicates his throne,
He has a forfeiture incurr'd. Swift.

Forga've. The preterite of forgive.

Forge. n. s. [forge, French.
1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.
Now behold
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens Shakesp.
In other part stood one, who at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass,
Had melted. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Th' o'er labour'd Cyclop from his task retires,
Th' Æolian forge exhausted of its fires. Pope.
2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.
From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hooker.
3. Manufacture of metalline bodies; the act of working.
In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious and obedient to the stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, and moulded. Bacon.

To Forge. v. a. [forger, old French.]
1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.
The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold,
Must need, have golden furniture. Chapman's Iliad.
Tyger with tyger, bear with bear you'll find
In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
But lawless man the anvil dates profane,
And forge the instrument by which a man is slain,
Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword.
Tate's Juv.
2. To make by any means.
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
'Till he had forg'd himself a name i' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
His heart's his mouth:
What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent
Shakesp.
Those names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of scholars, could never get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.
3. To counterfeit; to falsify.
Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
For my more having would be but as much
To make me hunger more, that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Fo'rger. n. s. [from forge.]
1. One who makes or forms.
2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.
As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels. Government of the Tongue.
No forger of lies willingly and wittingly furnishes out the means of his own detection. Wisd.

Fo'rgery. n. s. [from forge.] The crime of falsification.
Has your King married the Lady Gray?
And now, to sooth your forgery and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me patience. Shakesp.
Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts, had they been false, to have shewn their falsehood, and to have convicted them of forgery. Stephens's Sermons.
A forgery, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.
2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.
He ran on embattled armies clad in iron,
And weaponless himself,

Made

Made arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail
Adamantean proof. Milton's Agonistes.

To FORGE'T. v. a. preter. forgot; part. forgotten, or forgot. [ꝑongyttan, Saxon; vergeten, Dutch.]

1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not forgot
Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. Shakespeare.
When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard. Shakespeare.
Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Eccles. xxxvii. 6.
No sooner was our deliverance completed, but we forgot our danger and our duty. Atterbury.
Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget; yet I will not forget thee. Isa. xlix. 5.
If we might forget ourselves, or forget God; if we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and every place. Law.
The mats of mean forgotten things. Ancn.

FORGE'TFUL. adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.
2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood,
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their irksome years.
Dryd. Æn.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers. Heb. xiii. 2.
The Queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
Have you not love to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
Makes me forgetful? Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.
I, in fact, a real interest have,
Which to my own advantage I would save;
And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend
To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGE'TFULNESS. n. s. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness! Shakesp.
All birds and beasts be hush'd; sleep steals away
The wild desires of men and toils of day;
And brings, descending, through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope's Statius.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forgetfulness of her duty. Hooker.

FO'RGETIVE. adj. [from forge.] That may forge or produce. A word, I believe, peculiar to Shakespeare.

Good sherris sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble shapes, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit. Shakespeare.

Like innocence, and as ſerenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forſwears thy gold! Dryd. Juv.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forſwear himſelf to be perjured; to ſwear falſely.

To leave my Julia, ſhall I be forſworn?
To leave fair Sylvia, ſhall I be forſworn?
To wrong my friend, ſhall I be much forſworn?
And ev'n that power which gave me firſt my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shakeſpeare.

One ſays, he never ſhould endure the ſight
Of that forſworn, that wrongs both lands and laws. Daniel.

I too have ſworn, ev'n at the altar ſworn,
Eternal love and endleſs faith to Theſeus;
And yet I'm falſe, forſworn, the hallow'd ſhrine,
That heard me ſwear, is witneſs to my falſhood. Smith.

To FORS'WEAR. v. n. To ſwear falſely; to commit perjury.

Take heed, for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

I have convey'd aboard. Shakesp. Comedy of Err.

FRAY. n. s. [effroyer, to fright, French.]

1. A battle; a fight.

Time tells, that on that ever blessed day,
When Christian swords with Persian blood were dy'd,
The furious prince Tancredie from that fray
His coward foes chased through forests wide. Fairf.
After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought.
Shakesp. Henry VI.
He left them to the fates in bloody fray,
To toil and struggle through the well-fought day.
Pope.

2. A duel; a combat.

Since, if we fall before th' appointed day,
Nature and death continue long their fray. Denham.
The boaster Paris oft defir'd the day
With Sparta's King to meet in single fray. Pope.

3. A broil; a quarrel; a riot of violence.

I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice, and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth. Shakesp.

To FRAY. v. a. [effrayer, French.]

1. To fright; to terrify.

The panther, knowing that his spotted hide
Doth please all beasts, but that his looks them fray,
Within a bush his dreadful head doth hide,
To let them gaze, while he on them may prey.
Spenser.
So diversely themselves in vain they fray,
Whilst some more bold to measures him stand nigh.
Spenser.
Fishes are thought to be frayed with the motion caused by noise upon the water. Bacon.
These vultures prey only on carcases, on such stupid minds as have not life and vigour to fray them away.
Gov. of Tongue.

2. [frayer, French.] To rub.

FRECKLE. n. s. [flecb, a spot, German; whence flecke, freckle.]

1. A spot raised in the skin by the sun.

Ruddy his lips, and frosh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen.
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryd.

2. Any small spot or discoloration.

The cowslips tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see:
Those be rubies fairy favours;
In those freckles live their favours. Shakesp.
The farewell frosts and easterly winds now spot your tulips; therefore cover such with mats, to prevent freckles. Evelyn.

FRE'CKLED. adj. [from freckle.] Spotted; maculated; discoloured with small spots.

Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,
The freckled trout to take
With silken worms. Drayton's Cynthia.
The even mead that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness. Shakesp. Henry V.
Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,
Spotted over like a leopard;
And, thy freckled neck display'd,
Envy breeds in ev'ry maid. Swift.

FRE'CKLY. adj. [from freckle.] Full of freckles.

FRED. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries fredstole, i. e. the seats of peace. So Frederic is powerful or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson's Camden.

FREE. adj. [preah, Saxon; vry, Dutch.]

1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependent.

A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any condition of subjection. Temple.
Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains?
Dryden.
How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will? Locke.
This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
Not fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains.
Pulor.
Set an unhappy pris'ner free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee. Prior.

2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.

Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a publick constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker.
Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakesp. Macbeth.
It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not indifferent. Swift.

3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell;
Not free, what proof could they have given sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;
Not what they would? Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Permitted; allowed.

Why, Sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all.
Milton.
To gloomy cares my thoughts alone are free,
Ill the gay sports with troubled thoughts agree.
Pope.

5. Licentious; unrestrained.

O conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,
When evils are most free? Shakesp.
Physicians are too free upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends. Temple.
The criticks have been very free in their censures.
Felton.
I know there are to whose presumptuous thoughts
Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults.
Pope.

6. Open; ingenuous; frank.

Castalio, I have doubts within my heart;
Will you be free and candid to your friend? Otway.

7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.

'Tis not to make me jealous,
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous. Shak.
Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter. Hakewill.
Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe. Prior.

8. Liberal; not parsimonious: with of.

Glo'ster too, a foe to citizens,
O'ercharging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakesp.
No statute in his favour says,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend at others spare. Pope.
Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works. Pope

9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.

We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask. Bacon.

10. Clear from distress.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind Shak.

11. Guiltless; innocent.

Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
Confound the ign'rant. Shakesp. Hamlet.
My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryd.

12. Exempt: with of anciently; more properly from.

These
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from conscience, is a slave to fame. Denh.
Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free. Dryden.
Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground.
Dryden.
The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions.
Locke.

13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without vassalage; admitted to the privileges of any body: with of.

He therefore makes all birds of every sect
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect.
Dryden.
What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end
Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark-staring mad, that thou should'st tempt the sea?
Dryden.

14. Without expence; by charity, as a free-school.

To FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is

By law and proceſs of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to
The anger of the king, nor guilty of,
If any be, the treſpaſs of the queen. Shakeſ.

He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. 2 Mac. ii. 22.

Can'ſt thou no other maſter underſtand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand?
Dryden.

Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poiſon through the martial throng,
My jav'lin ſhall revenge ſo baſe a part,
And free the ſoul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.

2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill: with of or from.

It is no marvail, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of theſe inconveniencies the paſſions of thoſe meetings gave him, than to diſſolve them. Clarendon.

Hercules
Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar. Dryden
Our land is from the rage of tygers free'd. Dryd.

3. To clear from impediments or obſtructions.

The chaſte Sibylla ſhall your ſteps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.

Fierce was the fight; but haſt'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden.

This maſter-key
Frees every lock, and leads us to his perſon. Dryd.

4. To baniſh; to ſend away; to rid. Not in uſe.

We may again
Give to our tables meat, ſleep to our nights,
Free from our feaſts and banquets bloody knives.
Shakeſp.

Never any ſabbath of releaſe
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.

5. To exempt.

For he that is dead is free'd from ſin. Rom. vi. 7.

FREEBO'OTER. n. ſ. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Perkin was not followed by any Engliſh of name, his forces conſiſted moſtly of baſe people and freebooters, fitter to ſpoil a coaſt than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.

The Earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Iriſh frigates, or ſuch freebooters as ſailed under their commiſſion, taken all the ſeamen. Clarendon.

FREEBO'OTING. n. ſ. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handſomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his beſt and ſureſt friend. Spenſer.

FRE'EBORN. adj. [free and born.] Not a ſlave; inheriting liberty.

O baſeneſs, to ſupport a tyrant's throne,
And cruſh your freeborn brethren of the world!
Dryden.

I ſhall ſpeak my thoughts like a freeborn ſubject, ſuch things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am ſure no Frenchman durſt. Dryden.

Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to ſervile ſhame;
Who from conſent and cuſtom draw,
The ſame right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

FREECHA'PPEL. n. ſ. [free and chappel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the juriſdiction of the ordinary. The king may alſo licenſe a ſubject to found ſuch a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's viſitation. Cowel.

FRE'ECOST. n. ſ. [free and coſt.] Without expence; free from charges.

We muſt not vouch any man for an exact maſter in the rules of our modern policy, but ſuch a one as has brought himſelf ſo far to hate and deſpiſe the abſurdity of being kind upon freecoſt, as not ſo much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South.

FRE'EDMAN. n. ſ. [freed and man.] A ſlave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman juſtles, and will be preferr'd;
Firſt come, firſt ſerv'd, he cries. Dryden's Juv.

FRE'EDOM. n. ſ. [from free.]

1. Liberty; exemption from ſervitude; independence.

The laws themſelves they do ſpecially regard, as moſt repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenſer on Ireland.

O freedom! firſt delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their maſters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inſcribe
Their names in this or t'other Roman tribe:
That falſe enfranchiſement with eaſe is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden.

2. Privileges; franchiſes; immunities.

By our holy ſabbath have I ſworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shak.

3. Power of enjoying franchiſes.

This prince firſt gave freedom to ſervants, ſo as to become citizens of equal privileges with the reſt, which very much increaſed the power of the people. Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, neceſſity, or predetermination.

I elſe muſt change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themſelves ordain'd their fall. Milton.

In every ſin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by ſo much is the act the more ſinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is ſo much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South.

5. Unreſtraint.

I will that all the feaſts and ſabbaths ſhall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac. x.

6. The ſtate of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their ſtate lays them under a greater neceſſity of always chuſing and doing the beſt things. Law.

7. Eaſe or facility in doing or ſhowing any thing.

FREEFO'OTED. adj. [free and foot.] Not reſtrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freefooted. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

FREEHE'ARTED. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unreſtrained.

Love muſt freehearted be, and voluntary;
And not inchanted, or by fate conſtrain'd. Davies.

FREEHO'LD. n. ſ. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life. Freehold in deed is the real poſſeſſion of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to ſuch land or tenements before his entry or ſeiſure. Freehold is ſometimes taken in oppoſition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bookland, that is, holden by book or writing, or folcland, that is, holden, without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better ſort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being ſuch as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the poſſeſſion of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowel.

No alienation of lands holden in chief ſhould be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record. Bacon's Office of Alienations.

There is an unſpeakable pleaſure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and ſnow, will make the owner pleaſed in the poſſeſſion, and ſtout in the defence of it. Addiſon.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I ſhould be glad to poſſeſs a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give conſent. Swift.

FREEHO'LDER. n. ſ. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did baniſh the old Engliſh freeholder, who could not live but under the law; ſo the law did baniſh the Iriſh lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FRE'ELY. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vaſſalage; without ſlavery; without dependence.

2. Without reſtraint; heartily; with full guſt.

If my ſon were my huſband, I would freelier rejoice in that abſence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would ſhew moſt love. Shakeſpeare's Coriolanus.

3. Plentifully; laviſhly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains
I have beſtow'd to breed this preſent peace,
You would drink freely. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

4. Without ſcruple; without reſerve.

Let ſuch teach others who themſelves excel,
And cenſure freely who have written well. Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true verſifying, were even to eat acorns with ſwine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Aſcham.

The path to peace is virtue: what I ſhow,
Thyſelf may freely on thyſelf beſtow:
Fortune was never worſhipp'd by the wiſe;
But ſet aloft by fools, uſurps the ſkies. Dryden.

6. Without neceſſity; without predetermination.

Freely they ſtood who ſtood, and fell who fell. Milton.

He leaves us to chuſe with the liberty of reaſonable beings: they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do alſo freely reject it. Regers.

7. Frankly; liberally; without coſt.

By nature all things have an equally uncommon uſe; nature freely and indifferently opens the boſome of the univerſe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneouſly; of its own accord.

FRE'EMAN. n. ſ. [free and man.]

1. One not a ſlave; not a vaſſal.

Had you rather Cæſar were living, and die all ſlaves, than that Cæſar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakeſpeare.

If to break looſe from the conduct of reaſon, and to want that reſtraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chuſing or doing the worſt, be liberty, true liberty, madmen and fools are the only freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent,
What nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.

What this union was is expreſſed in the preceding verſe, by their both having been made freemen on the ſame day. Addiſon.

FREEMI'NDED. adj. [free and mind.] Unperplexed; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully diſpoſed at hours of meat, ſleep, and exerciſe, is one of the beſt precepts of long laſting. Bacon.

FRE'ENESS. n. ſ. [from]

1. The ſtate or quality of being free.

2. Openneſs; unreſervedneſs; ingenuouſneſs; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he pleaſe, for the freeneſs of the confeſſion. Dryden.

1. Generoſity; liberality.

I hope it will never be ſaid that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, ſhall in their corporations exceed the clergy itſelf, and their ſons, in freeneſs of giving. Spratt.

FREESCHO'OL. n. ſ. [free and ſchool.] A ſchool in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, proviſion was made by another law, that there ſhould be one freeſchool at leaſt erected in every dioceſe. Davies.

Two clergymen ſtood candidates for a ſmall freeſchool; a gentleman who happened to have a better underſtanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better ſcholar. Swift.

FREESPO'KEN: adj. [free and ſpoken.] Accuſtomed to ſpeak without reſerve.

Nerva one night ſupped privately with ſome ſix or ſeven; amongſt whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courſes as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the Emperor fell into diſcourſe of the injuſtice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accuſers; and ſaid, what ſhould we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at ſupper, and was a freeſpoken ſenator, ſaid, Marry, they ſhould ſup with us. Bacon.

FREE'STONE. n. ſ. [free and ſtone.] Stone commonly uſed in building.

Freeſtone is ſo named from its being of ſuch a conſtitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I ſaw her hand; ſhe has a leathern hand, a freeſtone-coloured hand. Shakeſp. As you like it.

The ſtreets are generally paved with brick or freeſtone, and always kept very neat. Addiſon on Italy.

FREETHI'NKER. n. ſ. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheiſt is an old faſhioned word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addiſon.

Of what uſe is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the ſole end, how remote ſoever in appearance, of all objections againſt Chriſtianity? And therefore the freethinkers conſider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have ſuch a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one ſingle nail, the whole fabrick muſt fall to the ground. Swift.

FREEWI'LL. n. ſ. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without reſtraint by neceſſity or fate.

We have a power to ſuſpend the proſecution of this or that deſire: this ſeems to me the ſource of all liberty; in this ſeems to conſiſt that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntarineſs; ſpontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Iſrael in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jeruſalem, go with thee. Ezra, vii. 13.

FREEWO'MAN. n. ſ. [free and woman.] A woman not enſlaved.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a freewoman ſhe is become a bondſlave. 2 Maccabees.

To FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [vriezen, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, ſeeing it hath the perſpicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidiſtant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well ſerve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the ſun. Locke.

To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

O'ens with [illegible] made trees
And [illegible] cups, that freeze,
Bow [illegible] where he did ſing. Shakeſp.
[illegible] thy kindneſs freezes. Shakeſp.

Heav'n froze above ſevere, the clouds congeal,
And thro' the cryſtal vault appear'd the ſtanding hail. Dryden.

To FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

2. To kill by cold.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almoſt to death, how did he lap me,
Ev'n in his garments! Shakeſp. Richard III.

My maſter and miſtreſs are almoſt frozen to death. Shakeſpeare.

3. To chill by the loſs of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almoſt freezes up the heat of life. Shakeſ.

Death came on amain
And exercis'd below his iron reign;
Then upward to the ſeat of life he goes;
Senſe fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

To FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. fraught; which being now uſed as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]

1. To load a ſhip or veſſel with goods for tranſportation.

The princes
Have to the port of Athens ſent their ſhips,
Fraught with the miniſters and inſtruments
Of cruel war. Shakeſp. Troilus and Creſſida, Prol.

Now, indeed, that man leſs mad than theſe,
Who freights a ſhip to venture on the ſeas;
With one frail interpoſing plank to ſave
From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryd.

Freighted with iron, from my native land
I ſteer my voyage Pope's Odyſſey.

2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a veſſel is freighted.

I would
Have ſunk the ſea within the earth, or ere
It ſhould the good ſhip ſo have ſwallow'd, and
The freighting ſouls within her. Shakſp.

FREIGHT. n. ſ.

1. Any thing with which a ſhip is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight;
The ſky veſſel groans beneath the weighty burden. Dryden.

Of envy, discord, and of cruel deeds. Dryden's Æn.

Strong god of iron, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing north and hyperborean seas,
Terrour is thine, and wild amazement, flung
From out thy chariot, withers ev'n the strong. Dryden.

40. FROM out of.

Whatsoever such principle there is, it was at the first first found out by discourse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth. Hooker.

11. FROM under.

He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under ashes into sudden flame. Milt. Agonistes.

12 FROM within

From within
The broken bowel, and the bloated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms. Dryden.

FRO'MWARD. prep [ꝼpam and peapb, Saxon.] Away from; the contrary to the word toward. Not now in use.

As chearfully going towards as Pyrocles went froward from and his death. Sidney

The horizontal needle is continually varying towards East and West; and so the dipping or inclining needle is varying up and down, towards or from as the zenith. Cheyne.

And my galage grown fast to my heele. Spenser's Past.

FROST. n. s. [ꝼpopt, Saxon.]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man: to day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When the frost seises upon wine, only the more watery parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope.

FRO'STBITTEN. adj. [frost and bitten.] Nipped or withered by the frost.

The leaves are too much frostbitten. Mortimer.

FRO'STED. adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.

Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold. Gay.

FRO'STILY. adv. [from frosty.]

1. With frost; with excessive cold.

2. Without warmth of affection.

Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly
Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. Ben Jonson.

FRO'STINESS. n. s. [from frosty.] Cold; freezing cold.

FRO'STNAIL. n. s. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.

The claws are streit only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Grew's Cosmol.

FRO'STWORK. n. s. [frost and work.] Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze. Blackmore.

FRO'STY. adj. [from frost.]

1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Shak. Titus Andron.

The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon.

A gnat half-starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive. L'Estrange.

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Shak.

FROTH. n. s. [frae, Danish and Scottish.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

His hideous tail then hurled he about,

And

And therewith all enwrapt the nimble thighs
Of his froth foamy steed. Fairy Queen.

When wind expireth from under the sea, as it causeth some resounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Natural History.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain hart'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Glanville.

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dryden.

They were alse froth my raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd,
Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness. Newton.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Any empty or senseless shew of wit or eloquence.

3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.

Who eateth his veal, pig, and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tusser.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden.

Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.

FRO'THILY, adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume.

2. In an empty trifling manner.

FRO'THY. adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; wasting.

Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy. Bacon.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy variety of discourse that commonly attends those pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson.

FROUNCE. n. s. A word used by falconers for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill. Skinner.

To FROUNCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To frizzle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Fairy Queen.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buskin, or an overstaring frounced head. Ascham.

Thus, night oft see me in thy pale career,
'Till civil suited morn appear;
Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.

FRO'UZY. adj. [A cant word.]

1. Fœtid; musty.

Petticoats in frouzy heaps. Swift.

2. Dim; cloudy.

When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frouzy dirty-coloured red
Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.

FRO'WARD. adj. [ppampeapb.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse: the contrary to toward.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.

She's not froward, but modest as the dove:
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shakesp.

Whose ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Prov. ii. 15.

Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon.

'Tis with froward men, and froward factions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be pleased quieted by fear than by any sense of duty. L'Estrange.

Motions occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple.

FRO'WARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Peevishly; perversely.

I had me and was wroth, and he went frowardly in the way of his heart. Isa. lvii. 17

FRO'WARDNESS. n. s. [from froward.] Peevishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother? how many indignities does he pass by? how many affronts does he put up at our hands? South.

We'll mutually forget
The warmth of youth, and frowardness of age.
Addis. Cato.

FRO'WER. n. s. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath. Tusser.

To FROWN. v. a. [frogner, old French, to wrinkle. [Skinner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that she frowns; I'll say, she looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakesp.

They chuse their magistrate;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a gravel bench
Than ever frown'd, Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on?
You are too much of late i'th' frown.

——Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour. Knolles.

In his half-clos'd eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command.
Prior.

FRO'WNINGLY. adv. [from frowning.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?

A countenance more in sorrow than in anger. Shak.

FRO'WY. adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frouzy.

But if they with thy gores should yede,
They soon might be corrupted;
Or like not of the frowy fede,
Or with the weeds be glutted. Spenser's Pastorals.

FRO'ZEN. part. pass. of freeze.

1. Congealed with cold.

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms?
Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth
T' invade the frozen waggon of the North. Dryden.

A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

2. Chill in affection.

Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair; but his armour naturally representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto. Sidney.

Be not ever frozen, coy;
One beam of love will soon destroy
And melt that ice to floods of joy. Carew.

3. Void of heat or appetite.

Even here, where frozen charity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

F. R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.

FRUCTI'FEROUS. adj. [fructifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Ainsworth.

To FRUCTIFY. v. a. [fructifier, French.] To make fruitful; to fertilise.

The legal terms the sovereign rules are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth. Howell's Vocal Forest.

Whereo'er she looks, behold some sudden birth,
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth. Granville.

To FRU'CTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befal men in this present life. Hooker.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown.

FRUCTIFICA'TION. n. s. [from fructify.] The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

FRU'CTUOUS. adj. [fructueux, French; from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile, impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn
Oft intermix'd occur; and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, to rich the soil,
So much the more fructuous moisture o'erabound! Philips.

FRU'GAL. adj. [frugalis, Latin; frugal, French.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I not admire,
How nature wide and frugal could commit
Such disproportion, with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater to frame and to her own use. Milton.

And with a purveyor's sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh and mouldy bread. Harte.

It through mists he throws his solemn beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and thin gilt streams,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden's Virgil.

FRU'GALLY. adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

Mean time young Palmira's marriage press'd,
And frugally reviews the charge to shun,
To join in mother's bridal with his own. Dryden.

FRUGA'LITY. n. s. [frugalité, French; frugalitas, Lat.] Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink. Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too,
Those differing virtues, meet in you. Waller.

In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

The boundaries of virtue are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

FRUGI'FEROUS. adj. [frugifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Ainsworth.

FRUIT. n. s. [fructus, Latin; frwyth, Welsh; fruit, French.]

By this way great trees of different kinds one on another, a fruitbearing trees on those that bear not. Mortimer.

FRUI'TERER. n. s. [fruitier, French.] One who trades in fruit.

I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Walnuts the fruiterer's hand in Autumn stain;
Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment the gain. Gay.

FRU'ITERY. n. s. [fruiterie, French.]

1. Fruit collectively taken.

Oft, notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, on the small fruitery
Exempt from ills, an oriental blast
Disastrous flies. Philips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRU'ITFUL. adj. [fruit and full.]

1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.

If she continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney.

The Earth,
Though in comparison of Heav'n, so small,
Nor glist'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect.
But on the fruitful earth. Milton.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next. Shakespeare.

3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.

Hear, Nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!
Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend
To make this creature fruitful:
Into her womb convey sterility. Shakesp. King Lear.

Male he created thee, but thy consort
Female for race; then bless'd mankind, and said,
Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the Earth;
Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold. Milton.

I have copied nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful. Gay.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,
And from Britannia's publick posts retire,
Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,
Through nations fruitful of immortal lays. Addison.

FRU'ITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolifick.

How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,
And purer fire through universal night,
And empty space did fruitfully unite. Roscommon.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. Shakespeare.

Fruitfully abound. Dryden.

FRU'ITFULNESS. n. s. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood. Raleigh's History.

2. The quality of being prolifick, or bearing many children.

The goddess, present at the match she made,
So bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryd.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary: I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

FRU'ITGROVES. n. s. [fruit and groves.] Shades, or close plantations of fruit trees.

The faithful slave,
Whom to my nuptial train Icarius gave,
To tend the fruitgroves. Pope's Odyssey.

FRUITION. n. s. [fruor, Latin.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him most effectually in estimation. Hooker.

I am driv'n, by breath of her renown,
Either to seek shipwreck, or to arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love. Shakesp.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Ev'n all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,
Naked and unadorned, could find success;
'Till by fruition, novelty destroyed,
The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd. Granville.

A bawd, ſir, fy upon him! Shakeſpeare.

But fy, my wand'ring muſe, how thou do'ſt ſtray!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?
Unhand me, or, I ſwear, I'll ſcratch your face:
Let go, for ſhame; you make me mad for ſpite.
My mouth's my own; and if you kiſs, I'll bite. Dryden.

Fy, madam, he cried, we muſt be paſt all theſe gaities. Tatler.

G.

GAB.

G Has two ſounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, becauſe it is formed by a preſſure ſomewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue againſt the upper gum. This ſound G retains before a, o, u, l, r; as, gate, go, gull. The other ſound, called that of the ſoft G, reſembles that of J, and is commonly, though not always, found before, e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which theſe words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often ſilent in the middle of the words before h; as, might. The Saxon Ȝ, ȝ, ſeems to have had generally the ſound of y conſonant; whence gate is by ruſticks ſtill pronounced yate.

He grows diſpirited and low,
He hates the fight, and ſhuns the blow. Prior.

6. A ſlight hurt by fretting off the ſkin. [From the verb.]

This is the fatalſt wound; as much ſuperior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or ſcratch. Government of the Tongue.

7. [From galla.]

Galls or galnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on trees; but thoſe of the oak only are uſed in medicine. We have Oriental and European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigneſs of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their ſurface, of a very firm texture, and a diſagreeable, acerb, and aſtringent taſte. The European galls are of the ſame ſize, with perfectly ſmooth ſurfaces: they are light, often ſpongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a leſs auſtere taſte, and are of much leſs value than the firſt ſort. The general hiſtory of galls is this: An inſect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole depoſites her egg: the lacerated veſſels of the tree diſcharging their contents, form a tumour or woody caſe about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour alſo ſerves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as ſoon as it is in its winged ſtate, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is ſeen, the maggot, or its remains, are ſure to be found within. It has been obſerved, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this obſervation ſhall be confined to the medicinal galls; for all thoſe excreſcencies which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls, though leſs firm in their texture. Hill.

Beſides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

Malpighi, in his treatiſe of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morboſe excreſcences, demonſtrates that all ſuch excreſcences, where any inſects are found, are excited by ſome venenoſe liquor, which, together with their eggs, ſuch inſects ſhed. Ray on the Creation.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than caſes of inſects, which are bred in them. Derham.

To GALL. v. a. [galer, French.]

1. To hurt by fretting the ſkin.

I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him ſlightly,
It may be death. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

His yoke is eaſy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis caſt. Denham.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horſe, begins with caſting his eye upon all things. Locke.

Invent new arts to make their charmers kind.
Granville.

5. Vicious love; lewdneſs; debauchery.

It looks like a ſort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided ſhe be not a profligate; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins.
Swift.

GA'LLEASS. n. ſ. [galeas, French.] A heavy low-built veſſel, with both ſails and oars. It carries three maſts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two ſeats for rovers, and ſix or ſeven ſlaves to each. To carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the ſtern there are two tire of guns.
Dict.

The Venetians pretend they could ſet out, in caſe of great neceſſity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galeaſſes.
Addiſon on Italy.

My father hath no leſs
Than three great argoſies, beſides two galeaſſes,
And twelve tight gallies.
Shakeſpeare.

GA'LLEON. n. ſ. [galion, French.] A large ſhip with four or ſometimes five decks, now in uſe only among the Spaniards.

I aſſured them that I would ſtay for them at Trinidado, and that no force ſhould drive me thence, except I were ſunk, or ſet on fire by the Spaniſh galleons.
Raleigh's Apology.

The number of veſſels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleaſſes and galleons ſeventy-two goodly ſhips, like floating towers or caſtles.
Bacon's War with Spain.

GA'LLERY. n. ſ. [galerie, French; derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a houſe, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In moſt part there had been framed by art ſuch pleaſant arbors, that, one anſwering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almoſt round about, which below gave a perfect ſhadow.
Sidney.

High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid.
Spenſer.

Your gallery
Have we paſs'd through, not without much content.
Shakeſp.

The row of return on the banquet ſide, let it be all ſtately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas.
Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known.
Denham.

Nor is the ſhape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the pariſh churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them.
Graunt.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches.
Addiſon.

2. The ſeats in the playhouſe above the pit, in which the meaner people ſit.

And all the thunder of the pit aſcends.
Pope.

GA'LLETYLE. n. ſ. I ſuppoſe this word has the ſame import with gallipot.

Make a compound body of glaſs and galletyle; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a ſtuff between a porcellane and a glaſs.
Bacon's Phyſ. Rem.

GALLEY. n. ſ. [galea, Italian; galere, French; derived, as ſome think, from galea, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλεάνη, the ſword-fiſh; as others from galleon, expreſſing in Syriac men expoſed to the ſea. From galley come galleaſs, galleon, galliot.]

1. A veſſel driven with oars, much in uſe in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load
Of ſhips, hulks, gallies, barks and brigandines.
Fairfax.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the uſe of gallies, and ſuch veſſels as could hardly brook the ocean.
Bacon.

Jaſon ranged the coaſts of Aſia the Leſs in an open boat or kind of galley.
Raleigh's Hiſtory.

On ooze ground his gallies moor;
Their heads are turn'd to ſea, their ſterns to ſhore.
Dryden.

2. It is proverbially conſidered as a place of toilſome miſery, becauſe criminals are condemned to row in them.

The moſt voluptuous perſon, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtſhips every day, would find it the greateſt torment that could befal him: he would fly to the mines and the gallies for his recreation, and to the ſpade and the mattock for a diverſion from the miſery of a continual uninterrupted pleaſure.
South.

GA'LLEY-SLAVE. n. ſ. [galley and ſlave.] A man condemned for ſome crime to row in the gallies.

As if one chain were not ſufficient to load poor men, he muſt be clogged with innumerable chains: this is juſt ſuch another freedom as the Turkiſh galley-ſlaves do enjoy.
Brawb.

Hardened galley-ſlaves deſpiſe manumiſſion.
Decay of Piety.

The ſurges gently daſh againſt the ſhore,
Flocks quit the plains, and galley-ſlaves their oar.
Garth.

GA'LLIARD. n. ſ. [gaillard, French; imagined to be derived from the Gauliſh ard, genius; and gay.]

1. A gay, briſk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Selden is a galliard by himſelf.
Cleveland.

2. An active, nimble, ſprightly dance. It is in both ſenſes now obſolete.

I did think, by the excellent conſtitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the ſtar of a galliard.
Shakeſpeare's Twelfth Night.

There's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won:
You cannot revel into dukedoms there.
Shakeſp.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on: as muſicians uſe to do with thoſe that dance too long galliards.
Bacon.

The triple's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard time and meaſure time are in the medley of one dance.
Bacon.

GA'LLIARDISE. n. ſ. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety. Not in uſe.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company. Brown.

GA'LLICISM. n. s. [gallicisme, French; from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In English I would have Gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech. Felton on the Class.

GA'LLIGASKINS. n. s. [Caligæ Gallo-Vasconum. Skinner.] Large open hose. Not used but in ludicrous language.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The Winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue,
An horrid chasm discloses. Philips.

GALLO'ON. n. s. [galon, French] A kind of close lace made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

To GA'LLOP. v. n. [galoper, French.] Derived by all the etymologists, after Budæus, from καλωπάζω; but perhaps it comes from gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was't come by? Shak.

His steeds will be restrain'd,
But gallop lively down th' western hill. Donne.

In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain
His heav'nly limbs, and slow'd with such a mane,
When half surpriz'd, and fearing to be seen,
The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen. Dryd.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatened a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them. Sidney.

They 'gan espy
An armed knight towards them gallop fast,
That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Fairy Qu.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.

The golden sun
Gallops the zodiack in his glist'ring coach. Shakesp.

Whom doth time gallop withal?
—With a thief to the gallows. Shakespeare.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.

GALLOP. n. s. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once. Farrier's Dict.

GA'LLOPER. n. s. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

GA'LLOWAY. n. s. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the North; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

The wrathful skies
Gallow the very wand'rers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Shakespeare.

GA'LLOWGLASSES. n. s.

1. It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen the Irish call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallogla signifies an English servitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armaturæ; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corslet, before the corslet was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hanmer, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r
Of gallowglasses and stout kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shaksp.

GA'LLOW. } n. s. [It is used by some in
GA'LLOWS. } the singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowses. Galgo, Gothick; zealza, Saxon; galge, Dutch; which some derive from gabalus furca, Latin; others from גבה high, others from galln, Welsh, power; but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from agælpan, the gallows being the great object of legal terrour.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gaolers and gallowses. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

I prophesied if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown. Shaksp. Tempest.

He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected. Hayward.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of wasps while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

With war, and hoſtile ſnare, ſuch as refuſe
Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton

There is ſuch a variety of game ſpringing up before me, that I know not which to follow. Dryden.

A bloodhound will follow the perſon he purſues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chace. Arbuthnot.

Go, with thy Cynthia hunt the pointed ſpear
At the rough bear, or chace the flying deer;
I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,
At human hearts we fling, nor ever miſs the game. Prior.

Proud Nimrod firſt the bloody chace began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
Our haughty Norman boaſts that barb'rous name,
And makes his trembling ſlaves the royal game. Pope.

Shorten my labour, if its length you blame,
For, grow but wiſe, you rob me of my game. Young.

9. Solemn conteſts, exhibited, as ſpectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Cæſar is returning. Shakeſpeare

GAUDE. n. ſ. [The etymology of this word is uncertain: Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the moſt gaudy colour. Junius, according to his cuſtom, talks Αγαν@; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Douglaſs, to ſignify deceit or fraud, from gwawdio, Welſh, to cheat. It ſeems to me moſt eaſily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cauſe of joy; a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expreſſes pleaſure. In Scotland this word is ſtill retained, both as a ſhowy bawble, and the perſon fooled. It alſo in Scotland denotes a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a ſign of joy. It is not now much uſed.
He ſtole th' impreſſion of her fantaſy,

With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gaudes, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nofegays fweetmeats. Shakeſpeare.
The ſun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleaſures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudes,
To give me audience. Shakeſp. King Lear.
My love to Hermia
Is melted as the ſnow; ſeems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did dote upon. Shakeſp.
Some bound for Guinea, golden ſand to find,
Bore all the gaudes the ſimple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkiſh courts deſign'd,
For ſolded turbants fineſt holland bear. Dryd.

Some men glance and dart at others, by juſtifying themſelves by negatives; as to ſay, this I do not. Bacon.

I have never glanced upon the late deſigned proceſſion of his holineſs and his attendants, notwithſtanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous ſpeculations. Addiſon.

He had written verſes wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor, famous for dulneſs. Swift.

To GLANCE. v. a. To move nimbly; to ſhoot obliquely.

Glancing an eye of pity on his loſſes.
Enough to preſs a royal merchant down. Shak.

GLA'NCINGLY. adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; tranſiently.

Sir Richard Hawkins hath done ſomething in this kind, but brokenly and glancingly, intending chiefly a diſcourſe of his own voyage. Hakewill.

GLAND. n. ſ. [glant, Latin; gland, Fr.]

All the glands of a human body are reduced to two ſorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little ſmooth body, wrapt up in a fine ſkin, by which it is ſeparated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to paſs in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this ſort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands and teſtes. A conglomerate gland is compoſed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.

The abſceſs begun deep in the body of the glands. Wiſeman.

The glands, which o'er the body ſpread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twiſted with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obſtruct. Blackmore.

GLA'NDERS. n. ſ. [from gland.] In a horſe is the running of corrupt matter from the noſe, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green, or black. Farrier's Dict.

His horſe is poſſeſt with the glanders, and like to moſe in the chine. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

GLANDI'FEROUS. adj. [glans and fero, Latin.] Bearing maſt; bearing acorns, or fruit like acorns.

The beech is of two ſorts, and numbered amongſt the glandiferous trees. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

GLA'NDULE. n. ſ. [glandula, Latin; glandule, Fr.] A ſmall gland ſerving to the ſecretion of humours.

Nature hath provided ſeveral glandules to ſeparate this juice from the blood, and no leſs than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called ductus ſalivales. Ray

GLANDULO'SITY. n. ſ. [from glandulous.] A collection of glands.

In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval glandulo'ſities. Brown's Vulg. Err.

GLA'NDULOUS. adj. [glanduloſus, Latin; glanduleux, French, from glandule.] Pertaining to the glands; ſubſiſting in the glands: having the nature of glands.

The beaver's bags are no teſticles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous ſubſtances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Such conſtitutions muſt be ſubject to glandulous tumours, and ruptures of the lymphaticks. Arbuth.

To GLARE. v. n. [glaren, Dutch.]

1. To ſhine ſo as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come ſuddenly into the dark, or, contrariwiſe, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the ſight confuſed. Bacon.

His glaring eyes with anger's venom ſwell,
And like the brand of foul Alecto flame. Fairfax.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit, and groſs hyperboles: he maintains majeſty in the midſt of plainneſs; he ſhines, but glares not; and is ſtately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cacus ſtands reveal'd to ſight;
The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden.

Alas, thy dazzled eye
Beholds this man in a falſe glaring light,
Which conqueſt and ſucceſs have thrown upon him.
Addiſon.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.

Thou haſt no ſpeculation in thoſe eyes,
Which thou doſt glare with. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

Look, how pale he glares! Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;
But when they met they made a ſurly ſtand,
And glar'd, like angry lions, as they paſs'd,
And wiſh'd that ev'ry look might be their laſt. Dryd.

3. To ſhine oſtentatiouſly, or with too much laboured luſtre.

The moſt glaring and notorious paſſages are none of the fineſt, or moſt correct. Felton on the Claſſicks.

To GLARE. v. a. To ſhoot ſuch ſplendour as the eye cannot bear.

One ſpirit in them rul'd, and every eye
Glar'd lightning, and ſhot forth pernicious fire
Among th' accurſt, that wither'd all their ſtrength.
Milton.

GLARE. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering luſtre; ſplendour, ſuch as dazzles the eye.

The frame of burniſh'd ſteel that caſt a glare
From far, and ſeem'd to thaw the freezing air.
Dryd. Fab.

I have grieved to ſee a perſon of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a ſpectre amidſt a glare of flambeaux. Addiſon's Guardian.

Here in a grotto, ſhelter'd cloſe from air,
And ſcreen'd in ſhades from day's deteſted glare,
She ſighs for ever. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

2. A fierce piercing look.

About them round
A lion now he ſtalks with fiery glare. Milton.

GLA'RING. adj. Applied to any thing notorious: as, a glaring crime.

GLASS. n. ſ. [glæꝛ, Saxon; glas, Dutch, as Pezon imagines from glas, Britiſh, green. In Erſe it is called klàun, and this primarily ſignifies clean or clear, being ſo denominated from its tranſparency.]

1. An artificial ſubſtance made by fuſing fixed ſalts and flint or ſand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glaſs cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glaſs, from the verb glanſen, which ſignifies amongſt them to ſhine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whoſe colour it reſembles. Peacham on Drawing.

Glaſs is thought ſo compact and firm a body, that it is indeſtructible by art or nature, and is alſo of ſo cloſe a texture that the ſubtleſt chymical ſpirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.

Show'rs of grenadoes rain, by ſudden burſt
Diſploding murd'rous bowels, fragments of ſteel
And ſtones, and glaſs and nitrous grain aduſt.
Philips.

2. A glaſs veſſel of any kind.

I'll ſee no more
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glaſs
Which ſhews me many more. Shakeſp. Macbeth.

3. A looking-glaſs; a mirrour.

He was the mark and glaſs, copy and book,
That faſhion'd others. Shakeſp. Henry IV.

He ſpreads his ſubtile nets from ſight,
With tinkling glaſſes, to betray
The larks that in the meſhes light. Dryd. Horace.

4. An Hour GLASS. A glaſs uſed in meaſuring time by the flux of ſand.

Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, ſhe would not live
The running of one glaſs. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.

5. The deſtined time of man's life.

No more his royal ſelf did live, no more his noble ſonne,
The golden Meleager now, their glaſſes all were run.
Chapman.

6. A cup of glaſs uſed to drink in.

To this laſt coſtly treaty,
That ſwallow'd ſo much treaſure, and like a glaſs
Did break i' th' rinſing. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.

When thy heart
Dilates with fervent joys, and eager ſoul
Prompts to purſue the ſparkling glaſs, be ſure
'Tis time to ſhun it. Philips.

7. The quantity of wine uſually contained in a glaſs; a draught.

While a man thinks one glaſs more will not make him drunk, that one glaſs hath diſabled him from well diſcerning his preſent condition.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The firſt glaſs may paſs for health, the ſecond for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

8. A perſpective glaſs.

The moon whoſe orb
Through optick glaſs the Tuſcan artiſt views. Milt.

Like thoſe who ſurvey the moon by glaſſes, I tell of a ſhining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. Dryden.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glaſs.

Get thee glaſs eyes;

And

And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see the things thou do'st not. Shak. King Lear.
Glass bottles are more fit for this second tining than those of wood. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirrour. Not in use.
Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney.

2. To case in glass.
Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence they were glass'd,
Did point out to buy them, along as you past. Shak.

3. To cover with glass; to glaze.
I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glassed over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLA'SS-FURNACE. n. s. [glass and furnace.] A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.
If ours be rather guilty to try whether the glowing heat of a glass-furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLA'SS-GAZING. adj. [glass and gazing.] Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirrour.
A whorson, glass-gazing, finical rogue. Shakesp.

GLA'SS-GRINDER. n. s. [glass and grinder.] One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.
The glass-grinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLA'SS-HOUSE. n. s. [glass and house.] A house where glass is manufactured.
I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, consisting of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glass-houses. Addison.

GLA'SS-MAN. n. s. [glass and man.] One who sells glass.
The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glass-man. Swift.

GLA'SS-METAL. n. s. [glass and metal.] Glass in fusion.
Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glass-metal. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GLA'SS-WORK. n. s. [glass and work.] Manufactory of glass.
The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glass-works. Bacon's Natural History.

GLA'SSWORT. n. s. [salicornia, or saltwork.]
It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryoes grow on the extreme part of the leaves; these embryoes afterward become pods or bladders, which, for the most part, contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of Summer; and, having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, by the chymists. Miller.
For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glass-wort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

GLA'SSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.
In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which of all others, hath most affinity with glass; insomuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.
Man, proud man!
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
His glassy essence; like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastick tricks before high heav'n,
As make the angels weep. Shak. Meas. for Meas.
There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream.
Shakespeare.
The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing dust. Brown.
Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred
The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head? Sandys.
The glassy deep. Dryden's Æn.

GLASTONBURY Thorn. n. s. A species of MEDLAR.
This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in Winter, and flowers again in the Spring. Miller.

GLAUCO'MA. n. s. [γλαυκωμα; glaucome, Fr.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.
The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

GLAVE. n. s. [glaive, French; glaif, a hook, Welsh.] A broad sword; a falchion.
Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,
Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,

When zeal with aged clubs and glaves,
Gave chace to rockets and white staves. Hudibras.

To GLAVER. v. n. [glaver, Welsh, flattery; glupan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheedle. A low word.
Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies, and a glavering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician. L'Estrange.

To GLAZE. v. a. [To glass, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.
Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glass Bacon's Essays.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glâse argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.
Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with brining tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shakesp.
The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it found reason that carries the stroke home. Grew's Cosm. Sac.
White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

GLA'ZIER. n. s. [corrupted from glasier, or glassier, of glass.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

And jingling sashes on the penthouse sound. Gay.
And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part. Harte.

GLEAM. n. s. [gehoma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.
Then was the fair Dodonian tree in seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;
And conqueror bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.
At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise Lost.
As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast. Dryden.
We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addison.
In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green.
Pope.
Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams,
Fires that glow. Pope's St. Cecilia.

To GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden coruscation.
Observant of approaching day,
The meek-eyd morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled East. Thomson.

2. To shine.
On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees.
Thomson.

GLEA'MY. adj. [from gleam.] Flushing; darting sudden coruscations of light.
In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way.
Pope.

To GLEAN. v. a. [glaner, French, as Skinner thinks, from granum, Lat.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.
She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers.
Ruth ii.

He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.
Dryden.
The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself. Nelson.
She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palemon's fields. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.
Gather
So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shak.
That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, Card'nal, by extortion. Soak.
They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. Judges, xx. 45.
But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,
Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear
Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear. Dryden's Æn.
In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheafs, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. s. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.
Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron. Dryden's Virgil.

GLE'ANER. n. s. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.
For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thomson.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.
An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant statesman. Locke.

GLE'ANING.

GLE'ANING. n. s. [from gleam.] The act of gleaning, or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury.

GLEBE. n. s. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

Thus, like the moory plots, delights in sedgy bowers,
The grassy garlands loves, and oft attir'd with flowers
Of rank and mellow glebe. Drayton.

Fertile of corn the glebe of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,
'Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to day. Garth.

2. The land possessed as a part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts, the one in land, commonly called The glebe; another in tythe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Swift.

GLE'BOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy. Dict.

GLE'BY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flatt'ry! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand
Sadly dissus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hope and harvest of the year. Prior.

GLEDE. n. s. [glidaglida, Saxon.] A kind of hawk.

Ye shall not eat the glede, the kite, and the vulture. Deut.

GLEE. n. s. [glizze, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gayety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee. Fairy Queen.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by vexing the inhabitants; who again foreslow not to baigne them with perfume. Carew.

Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewell my glee!
No happiness is now reserved for me. Gay.

The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;
Each barley-head untaxt, and day-light free. Harte.

GLIB. adj. [from ? Skinner.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them; the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them. Burnet's Theory.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong horse, compactly twisted together with a noose that slipt as glib as a birdcatcher's gin. Arbuthnot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and oily art
To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,
I'll do't before I speak. Shakespeare's King Lear.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English. Locke.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains;
Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains:
And then, to make them pass the glibber,
Revis'd by Tibbald, Moore, and Cibber. Swift.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man;
Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran. Swift.

GLIB. n. s.

The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glibs, which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguiling them. Spenser on Ireland.

To GLIB. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all; fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations; they are cohairs,
And I had rather glib myself, than they
Should not produce fair issue. Shakespeare.

GLI'BLY. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as consciences revolt at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction. Government of the Tongue.

GLI'BNESS. n. s. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold
The rock. Chapman.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not to bend, as the knee or joint, and by access of humour acquires a greater too, the more to facilitate its Government of the Tongue.

To GLIDE. v. n. [gli[illegible], Saxon; glijden, Dutch.

1. To flow gently and silently.

By East, among the dusky vallies, glide
The silver streams of [illegible] crystal flood. Fairfax.

GLOSS. n. ſ. [γλῶσσα; gloſe, French]

A ſcholium; a comment.

They never hear ſentence, which, mentioneth the name of ſcripture, but ſtrikwith their gloſſes upon it as if the word preached, the ſcripture explained, or delivered unto us in ſermons. Hooker.

Of theſe all ſouls, both good and bad, do teach,
With general voice, that ſouls can never die;
'Tis not mere ſtring gloſs, but nature's ſpeech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain paſſages therein, by putting ill gloſſes upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Howel.

All this, without a gloſs or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment. Hudibraſ.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his gloſſes, and interpreted my words into blaſphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty.
Dryden's Fables, Preface.

They give the ſcandal, and the wiſe diſcern;
Then gloſſes teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.

Explaining the text in ſhort gloſſes, was Accurſius's method. Baker on Learning.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large is the fields themſelves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their gloſſes are. Pope

His iron coat all over-grown with ruſt,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whoſe gliſtering gloſs darkened with filthy duſt.
Spenſer.

You are a ſectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloſs diſcovers,
To men that underſtand you, words and weaker

Golden opinions from all ſorts of people,
Which ſhould be worn now in their neweſt

The doubt will be whether it will poliſh ſo well; for ſteel gloſſes are more reflexient than plates of brass Bacon.

Weeds that the wind did toſs
The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that caſt
A faint dim gloſs,
Like that of oil Chapman's Iliads

It was the colour of devotion, giving a luſtre to reverence, and a gloſs to humanity South.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any ſeaſon pleaſant to look upon; but never ſo much as in the opening of the Spring, when they are all new and freſh, with their luſt gloſs upon them
Addiſon's Spectator.

An interpretation artfully ſpecious; a ſpecious repreſentation. This ſenſe ſeems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters oft with ſilly poets join,
To fill the world with ſtrange but vain conceit;
One brings the ſtuff, the other ſtamps the coin,
Which breeds nought elſe but gloſſes of deceit.
Sidney

It is no part of my ſecret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to ſet upon the face of this cauſe any fairer gloſs than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Preface.
